End Comes Peacefully at His Glen Eyrie Home After Brave Struggle Lasting More Than Two Years.

BODY TO BE CREMATED AT DENVER TOMORROW

Arrangements for Funeral Not Completed Public Memorial Services to Be Held at Colorado College Whole City Mourns Death of Great Philanthropist.

Gen. William J. Palmer, founder of Colorado Springs, died at his home at Glen Eyrie at 1:15 o'clock yesterday afternoon, at the age of 72 years. The end came peacefully, following a sinking spell of about 24 hours' duration, during [illegible] of which the general was unconscious. Surrounding his bedside were his daughters, Mrs. Leopold H. Myers of London, and the Misses Dorothy and Marjorie Palmer; his son-in-law, Mr. Myers, and Miss Sylvia Myers; Dr. Will Howard Swan of this city, Miss Clelia Jacobbi, [illegible] of the [illegible] Ante Bleads, Assistant W. F. Sherman of Colorado College, Lloyd O'Neil and Mrs. D. C. Dodge of Denver. Death was caused by [illegible] and extreme weakness following [illegible] by a fall [illegible].

General Palmer [illegible] day, and at [illegible] he fell into a sleep [illegible] never awoke. He [illegible] into a stupor [illegible] last 10 hours. Dr. W. H. Swan was hastily summoned Friday night and remained all [illegible]. Colonel Dodge was notified of the critical condition of his friend, and arrived from Denver [illegible] Mrs. Dodge [illegible].

No definite arrangements have been made for the funeral of General Palmer beyond the intention to take the body to Denver to remain for cremation. This is in accordance with the disposition of the body of Mrs. Palmer in 1895, and is in compliance with the expressed wish of the general.

Prominent citizens of Colorado Springs tried to prevail on the Palmer family to allow the body to lie in state at the city hall, but this was refused. They pointed out that it would be in direct violation of the wishes of the general, to whom ostentation and display were repugnant.

The general's mother, who died eight or eight years ago, at the age of 94, was a Quaker, and her son followed her precepts although the family has a pew at St. Stephen's Episcopal church. The Rev. Arthur N. Taft, rector of St. Stephen's church, will probably officiate at the funeral [illegible]. A public memorial service will be held at the College auditorium, in [illegible] hall, after the funeral, though the date has not been set.

Will Lie in City Hall

The only blood relatives [illegible] are the three daughters and the 5-months-old granddaughter, Mrs. Myers' child. The general's wife, Mrs. Queen Palmer, who died in London in 1895, was a sister of the following Clark Wells, of Colorado Springs, temporarily [illegible]. Nat Wells of New York city; Mrs. W. L. Scisser of this city, and Mrs. Maude S. van Ostveen of London. Clark Mellen is president of the Colorado Title and Artificial Stone company of this city. Nat Mellen is a well known architect and the third brother, Chas., is a lawyer. He is counsel to the charter committee of New York city.

Mrs. van Ostveen and her four children visited General Palmer for several weeks, leaving Glen Eyrie [illegible].

PALMER'S OWN STORY OF THE FOUNDING OF COLO. SPRINGS

TELLS INTERESTING TALE

Came to Colorado First Time in 1867 While on Railroad Survey to Pacific.

The following is General Palmer's own story of his first experiences in Colorado and his early explorations of the state.

If, in my jumble of a story, the perpendicular pronoun should be unduly used you must charitably remember that it is almost inseparable from reminiscence, and hold responsible the committee which insisted that this was the best reason why I should give this address, and declined to take "no" for an answer.

I had been in Colorado thrice before—in 1867 on a railroad survey to the Pacific, and again in '68—but my first visit to the neighborhood was on July 27, 1869, while traveling to Denver from the "end of the track" at Sheridan, Kan., on behalf of the Kansas Pacific railway, which was then pushing across the plains. The first railroad to the Pacific had been completed three weeks.

If you are interested in knowing how it all looked to me at that time with five eyes, perhaps I can do no better than to quote from two or three old letters written en route to an old friend, as these may also throw a side light on some of the conditions of life in the country at that day:

The Santa Fe Coach.

On the Santa Fe Coach, Near Antelope, Colo. July 25, 69.

We have ridden nearly all day in the coach having left Phil Sheridan in Kansas, at 4 this morning, and the sun is just nearly setting. I have not seen any buffalo as yet, but several bunches of antelope have started up, sped like lightning across the plain until out of range and then stopped to gratify their curiosity. The Indian war has obligingly kept aloof thus far except from the discussion of the Pacific passengers. The coffee voyage has, of course, been carried up in conversation among us and as usual there had been but one opinion expressed in regard to the proper and natural disposition of this trouble some loafer. One of advanced age was feared from the first to militate strongly against him.

Arrival at the Platte.

On the following day, the physicians, after a long consultation, and aided by an X-ray examination, diagnosed the injury as a fracture of the spine in the cervical region, together with serious damage to the spinal cord. An operation at that time was deemed inadvisable. A bulletin issued at 11 o'clock that night gave the outlook as very serious, although, it was stated, there was a possibility of improvement. On Monday a bulletin was issued to the effect that General Palmer had passed a comfortable day and showed a slight gain in improvement, with his condition otherwise remaining practically unchanged.

After close consultation the physicians in attendance issued bulletins almost daily for weeks, some showing slight gains and others indicating a loss in strength. These bulletins were eagerly awaited, not only by the citizens of the town founded by the invalid, but by the entire Pikes Peak region and state at large. Daily inquiries as to his condition were received from railroad men and survivors of his old Pennsylvania cavalry regiment, as well as from others all over the country.

Wonderful Will Power.

The universal sorrow in this city as a result of his illness was indicated by the action of the 5,000 school chil-

BRILLIANT CAREER AS RAILWAY BUILDER

GEN. PALMER HELD RECORD FOR RAPID CONSTRUCTION.

Superintended Building of Kansas Pacific and Originated the D. & R. G. System in Colorado.

Soon after the war General Palmer resumed employment in connection with railroad construction and very soon demonstrated his capacity for conceiving and financing large enterprises. After being advanced to the position of managing director of the Kansas Pacific road he was placed in charge of the construction of the last division of the road extending from Kit Carson to Denver. At the time of entering upon the work no material was in sight, and yet he graded the roadbed, procured the ties and rails laid the track and constructed the bridges for the 150 miles of road in 150 days. The completion of the work in so short a time could only be effected by the concentration of masterful abilities, first in grasping the situation in its entirety, and second in so arranging his plans as to utilize all the forces and conserve all the energies in carrying forward all the branches of construction simultaneously without delay or friction. In no other way could the task have been accomplished in so incredibly short space of time. That was more than thirty-five years ago, but the achievement stands yet unsurpassed as the world's record in railroad construction.

General Palmer came to Denver with the Kansas Pacific railway.

ESTATE ESTIMATED TO BE WORTH BETWEEN FIVE AND SIX MILLIONS

Major Portion Will Probably Go to General Palmer's Three Daughters. Colorado College Is Expected to Get Large Sum.

General Palmer's estate is conservatively estimated as worth between $5,000,000 and $10,000. It consists largely of real estate and stocks and bonds. He is known to have made a will a few years ago, and is reported to have added a codicil while in England last summer. It is understood that his three daughters, the only direct relatives, and the heirs-at-law, will receive the bulk of the estate, and the Colorado College will be a beneficiary probably to the extent of several hundred thousand dollars. Household servants, together with the retinue of employes of many years' standing, will also probably receive legacies. The will is held in trust in New York, and will be filed in the probate division of the county court in this city, probably within a week or 10 days.

Gave Away Millions.

It is figured that the dead philanthropist gave away upwards of $4,000,000 during his lifetime, or nearly one-half his entire estate. Colorado Springs has received parks, boulevards, etc. to the value of about $1,000,000. Colorado College has been given at least $500,000. General Palmer and associates gave more than $1,000,000 to the employes of the Rio Grande Western Railroad company when the general retired from the management of the company, and he gave at least $1,500,000 to innumerable private charities. Of these charities not the fractional part will probably ever be known. News of the generous [illegible] individual [illegible] the public [illegible] the grateful beneficiaries.

The General's Property.

Of the general's property in and around the city, the Antlers hotel is worth, in round numbers, $1,000,000. Glen Eyrie, the home of Mrs. Palmer, is one of the most magnificent in the west, is valued at upwards of $500,000. Glen Eyrie contains more than 1,000 acres. Other property, including The Gazette building and the buildings adjoining it on Pikes Peak avenue on the east, add about $500,000 more.

Much of General Palmer's realty holdings in this city and vicinity are in the name of the following corporations: The Colorado Springs, Antlers Hotel, Out West Printing and Stationery and Manitou Mineral Springs companies. Among his personal holdings are Glen Eyrie, a castle near the City of Mexico and magnificent homes in London.

Kept His Own Affairs Quiet.

His interest in the Colorado Springs company, together with that in other corporations, has not been made public, and no one, with the possible exception of Thomas J. Fisher, his business agent, and the secretary of most of them, [illegible] knows the extent of the [illegible] holdings.

FALL FROM HORSE ON OCTOBER 27, 1906, RESULTED IN PALMER'S DEATH

Had Been a Helpless Invalid From That Time Until Dissolution Came. Recently Returned From Extended Trip Abroad.

The accident from which General Palmer's death resulted occurred [illegible], 1906. He was horseback riding [illegible] his estate at Glen Eyrie, together with his daughters, the Misses Marjorie and Dorothy Palmer, and Miss Miller, a guest at the Palmer home.

The accident took place on the road leading from the Gateway to the Garden of the Gods while the party were returning from their usual morning ride. General Palmer's horse stumbled, throwing him violently to the ground. The general struck on his head and although he was not rendered unconscious, it was at once seen that he was seriously injured.

A few minutes later, W. A. Otis, of this city, and a party of friends, drove up in an automobile and offered assistance. General Palmer was placed in the machine and driven to his home at Glen Eyrie. Drs. W. H. Swan and Charles F. Gardiner of Colorado Springs, were immediately sent for and placed in charge of the case. Dr. H. F. Pershing, nerve specialists and Dr. Charles Powers, surgeon both leading members of the medical profession in Denver were summoned by wire, and arrived in Colorado Springs on the first train when they were immediately hurried to Glen Eyrie in an automobile.

The physicians found that General Palmer had sustained only very slight external injuries, his face and wrist being bruised and scratched, but their examination led to the belief that his spine was badly [illegible]. The patient did not lose consciousness, but his home last Wednesday. They expect to sail from New York next Wednesday. The four children, ranging in age from 3 to 7 years, frequently accompanied the general on his automobile rides and were great friends of the invalid, who was noted throughout his life for his ardent love of children. Mrs. Bolster is the wife of the curator of the Colorado College museum.

Thomas J. Fisher, secretary of the companies organized by General Palmer, was his most intimate business associate in this city. Dr. W. A. Bell, [illegible] now or Hitchingly, Surrey, England, who has large interests in this state and in Europe, and also a former Pueblo business associate. He is now in New York, and is expected here this week.

General Palmer's Character.

In reviewing the history of this wonderful man the points in his character which possibly stand out above all others are, his extreme modesty and the invariable good judgment and foresight which seemed almost to stamp him as a being of a superior kind. His faith in the future of the west was apparently of that divine order which is accorded to but few men in a century, and beyond doubt the greatest joy of his life was in living to see and know the realization of that faith.

From a typical "barefoot boy" such as Whittier wrote of, in a modest country home in Delaware to become the manager of railroads at twenty-one, the commander of troops and the confidant of the greatest military leaders of the Civil war at twenty-six, the pioneer of a new empire and the builder of railroads at thirty-five, the founder of cities and an international financier at forty, and the dispenser of millions to the cause of humanity in the evening of his life—this was the career of General Palmer.

Of his vast wealth, estimated at not less than $5,000,000, not one penny was made through anything which flavored of financial gambling of modern "frenzied" finance. He was essentially an empire builder and the originator of wealth, not for the mere sordid purpose of money-getting, but with the nobler ambition of conquering the apparently insurmountable difficulties of Nature in a new land and turning the desert into a paradise for future generations.

Money-Getting Not His Prime Object.

This was the great feature of his life work, and the proof of it is seen in the fact that he has never been regarded as a mere millionaire nor will he be remembered as such, but rather as the developer of a state, the builder of great railroads, the founder of beautiful cities. That he acquired wealth in the doing of his splendid deeds was a mere incident, and such was evidently the habitual attitude of his mind. Gold he took as it came to him and dispensed with a liberal hand, keeping it always at its true valuation and never making it the paramount object nor allowing it to taint the noble qualities of his mind and soul. In this he stands a类 and almost alone among the [illegible] of the world.

Small of stature and slight of frame, General Palmer was a phenomenal character from whatever standpoint he may be viewed. His early education was not what may be called "liberal" as measured by modern standards, for he was earning wages at an age when many boys of the present day are merely entering upon their college career, but his education was intensely practical. Yet he developed into a finished writer and a brilliant conversationalist, a patron of art and architecture of originality and taste. Possibly the most valuable year of his youthful education was that spent in England in the study of civil and mining engineering, which gave him the basis for his great career as a builder. His [illegible] and in the army developed those traits of devotion to duty, self-control and utter fearlessness in the face of danger and difficulty which marked his career.

Won Laurels From Gen. Thomas.

His war record was one which reflected credit on his after life, and his bravery and brilliant feats called forth the commendation in words of highest praise of General George H. Thomas, "The Rock of Chickamauga," who was proverbially a silent man, little given to the expression of his thoughts and less to the bestowal of compliments. "The coolness Captain Palmer displayed when captured by the enemy as a spy and during his captivity undoubtedly saved his life under God, for such a man was never born to die until his work was accomplished."

While secretary and treasurer of the Kansas Pacific railroad, now the Union Pacific, General Palmer came to Colorado for the first time in 1869, and at once apparently realized that the then territory was to be the field of his life work, for within two years he had been one of the chief instruments in bringing to Denver two railways—the Kansas Pacific and the Denver and Cheyenne. Within the next two years was conceived, planned and carried to completion the magnificent system of mountain railroad which General Palmer designated the Denver & Rio Grande and which is the greatest monument to his energy and indomitable courage, for it was built in the face of incredible difficulties, both natural and financial.

His fight with the Santa Fe over the Royal Gorge, which he won, marked of his former exciting military career and showed that he possessed in a marked degree the qualities that make the General Fremonts of America, and the Lord Clives of England. But the strife was not of his making, nor did he glory in the strife of man against man.

General Palmer's building of the Rio Grande Western came later and of all his achievements this was the one from which the bulk of his fortune was derived.

His Work in Mexico.

The story of General Palmer's work in Mexico would fill a volume, and when his biography comes to be written this may be among its most thrilling chapters. His operations in that country began in 1880 and are known in financial circles as the Palmer-Sullivan Concessions, consisting of grants obtained from the Mexican government by the consummate tact and skill in high [illegible] in the face of tremendous opposition, not alone from the suspicious Mexicans but and England. The building of the Mexican National railroad from Laredo, Texas, to Mexico City, was an achievement of General Palmer in [illegible] early eighties.

In this he met with great opposition in financial circles. He pushed the construction from both ends of the line, and while all but 15 miles of road was completed he was forced by his rivals to allow the enterprise to be completed by others and the road later went into the hands of the bondholders represented by W. G. Raoul of Atlanta, Georgia.

Within the last few years General Palmer disposed of his stock in the Mexican National railway to the Mexican Central Railway company. While his achievements in Mexico have remarkable, and will constitute an enduring monument to his foresight and enterprise, and a testimony to his financial ability and daring judgment, the General realized very little if any financial profit from his Mexican associations.

Besides being the real founder of the Colorado Fuel and Iron company, General Palmer was the founder of the Pleasant Valley Coal company of Utah, now the Utah Fuel company. Although the originator of the Denver & Rio Grande system, he did not at the time of his death hold any stock in the company and is not believed by those close to his confidence to have held any in the Rio Grande Western. Just where his financial interests are at the present time is known only to his lawyers in New York, where his will was drawn, it is said, by Attorney E. M. Sherard.

The Value of His Estate.

His present estate is placed by a gentleman of this city close in the confidence of the General at about $5,000,000, which is considered a very conservative estimate. The same authority gives it as a matter of personal knowledge that in the past year alone General Palmer gave for philanthropic purposes not less than $1,000,000. His gifts in the last few years have been so munificent and numerous as not only to prevent the natural growth of his wealth but to decrease the amount of the principal. Had he lived a few years more to carry out the projects he had in mind he would more than likely have reduced his fortune to less than half of its present estimated value.

Of General Palmer's immediate family, consisting of a sister and two brothers, Frank and Charles, none are now living. His father died while the General was in the army in 1864, and his mother in 1898 at the extreme age of 94, in Germantown, Philadelphia, which was long the family home. His sister was never married, and his only married brother, Frank, died without issue, so that General Palmer is survived by no nephews or nieces. His brother Frank lived for some time in this city but both brothers died in the east. His wife, to whom he was married in 1870, died in London in January, 1889.

First of All, a Lover of Nature.

Love of Nature was the fundamental characteristic of General Palmer. This is shown first in his great and constant devotion to the mountains rather than the crowded and artificial centers of the east or Europe. This spirit is indicated in the choice of the location for his magnificent home, Glen Eyrie, close to the everlasting hills. It was his daily delight to take long horseback rides over the hills and through the glorious ravines which surround his home, and which to him held all that compelling power of attraction that the true lover of Nature feels for God's most glorious handiwork.

It was while enjoying one of these rides over the road leading from his home to the Garden of the Gods that he met with the accident which ultimately caused his death.

CANNON IS CHOICE OF THE REPUBLICANS

PERSONNEL OF HOUSE ORGANIZATION IS CHOSEN.

Caucus Held to Time Up on Candidate for Speaker for Special Session of Congress

WASHINGTON, March 13.—Joseph G. Cannon of Illinois was tonight chosen Republican candidate for speaker of the House. It was the fourth time the honor had been conferred upon Mr. Cannon, but tonight neither the selection of a candidate for speaker nor the vote on the rules was characterized by the unanimity of party feeling that attended the three preceding caucuses. There was plenty of evidence of the insurrection, promised for Monday against the Cannon organization, but in the main the most determined anti-Cannon Republicans were not present.

Following is the personnel of the House organization, as chosen by the Republican caucus tonight:

For speaker—Joseph G. Cannon of Illinois.

For clerk of the House—Alexander McDowell of Pennsylvania.

For sergeant-at-arms—Samuel A. Lapham of Minnesota.

For sergeant-at-arms—Henry Casson of Wisconsin.

For doorkeeper—F. B. Lyon of New York.

For chaplain—Rev. Henry N. Couden, the blind preacher.

All those were selected as candidates to succeed themselves.

Representative Currier of New Hampshire was elected chairman of the caucus, and Representative Loudenslager of New Jersey elected to succeed himself as secretary.

Representative John W. Dwight of New York was chosen "whip" of the next House.

To nominate Mr. Cannon, Representative William A. Rodenberg of Illinois was recognized.

The caucus agreed to vote Monday for the adoption of the rules of the last House.

We have decided that the ordinary way of selling corsets is responsible for three fourths of the corset troubles that women complain of.

GENERAL PALMER TOOK LEADING PART IN THE DEVELOPMENT OF COLORADO COLLEGE

The following account of General Palmer's connection with Colorado College was written for The Gazette by President W. F. Slocum:

Probably nothing has been more constantly in the mind of General Palmer among all his objects of benevolence than Colorado college. At the first platting of Colorado Springs he had the future college so definitely in mind that the present campus was set aside for the purposes of higher education in 1870-1. It was this step and all that has followed which has given to him more than to anyone else the title of "Founder of Colorado College."

Scarcely a year has gone by since the establishment of the college during which General Palmer has not made substantial contributions for the purposes of permanent endowment, the erection of buildings, the current expenses, the care of the grounds and the [illegible] by other things which enter into the generous philanthropy of large-minded people.

The first building, which is now known as Cutler academy, received a generous contribution from him, and the north and south wings were built entirely from a contribution of General Palmer. At the dedication of this building he made a short address which was characteristic of his attitude towards the college, in which he said:

"My friends, in breaking this ground let us set apart and forever devote it (the campus and the structure which is to rise upon it) to the purpose of education, and in the most unsectarian way to the discovery and inculcation of truth."

A Generous Contributor.

Since President Slocum took up the affairs of the college, General Palmer has been a constant supporter of the institution in every possible way. He has contributed generously to the erection of Ticknor, Hagerman, Montgomery, McGregor, Perkins halls, and in fact to all the buildings upon the campus with the exception of those which have been special gifts from individuals, like the Coburn library and the Wolcott observatory. He was also one of the largest donors to the new scientific building and its equipment. Each year he has given generously toward current expenses, the care of the grounds and the development of the whole parking of the campus. Not only has he donated of his wealth, but he has taken great interest in the buildings, the work of the college and the improvement of the grounds, devoting a great deal of personal time to all these matters. He always made a point when he was in the country of being present at the meetings of the board of trustees, the finance and other committees of which he was a member. The value of his various contributions to the college is hundreds of thousands of dollars.

Great however as have been the material contributions which he has made to the college without doubt it could not today be in existence, the most valuable asset has been his great friendship for the institution. He has followed untiringly the development of the various departments and his advice and suggestions have always been of the greatest value. Again and again he has been through the laboratories, into the buildings and over the grounds, and his knowledge of all the details of the college work has been one of the secrets, not only of his untiring interest, but of the great value of his personal relation to that institution.

Foresaw Future of City.

Not only did he see, before there was a single house at Colorado Springs, the [illegible] ment of the town he saw definitely the rise and growth of the college and what it would mean to the state and this whole section of the country. The same far-sightedness which entered into the building of railroads, has manifested itself in all that he has done for Colorado college. When a few years ago the matter of the establishment of a scientific school at the college was broached, he took up the matter with great interest and has watched its development with constant care. The contributions by himself and his partner, George Foster Peabody, have supported the school since its beginning.

When the matter was to be settled of naming the new scientific building, which has come to play such an important part in the life and work of the college, it was felt instinctively that no name could be given to it except that of "Palmer Hall." It has been the faith of General Palmer and that of a few others, that has led people to support the institution during all these years of its struggles and growth.

It is of much interest to know that the first school in Colorado Springs was presided over by Mrs. Palmer who generously gave her time and strength to the establishment of this school, which afterward developed into our whole public school system

DR. GREGG PAYS BEAUTIFUL TRIBUTE TO MAN WHOSE DEATH IS A NATIONAL LOSS

By Dr. James B. Gregg.

That which first impressed every one, I suppose, who met General Palmer, was the innate and essential dignity of the man. You instantly recognized in [illegible] nothing of brusqueness or arrogance or imperiousness, his manner was always instinct with courtesy, but there was always in it the flavor of authority graciously exercised, but authority still—authority born partly of temperament, partly of nearly half a century's experience of command. It was interesting to see how all who met him manifested deference, as in the presence of a superior nature.

His dignity was enhanced by a certain natural reserve which gave the feeling of depths in his being unrevealed and unexplorable—a wealth of thought and feeling untouched and unknown. With acquaintance one came to be more and more impressed by his large-mindedness. He had not enjoyed in youth the advantages of a liberal education, but his profound interest in Colorado college from the start and his splendid and constant benefactions thereto, bore ample witness to his sense of the value of such education. I remember his remarking to me some years ago how everywhere college-bred men were coming to the front as managers of the largest business enterprises. The intellectual and moral discipline which he did not have the opportunity of gaining in college he had obtained in very large degree through books and travel and the conduct of large enterprises and mingling with men eminent in many fields of intellectual achievement.

Interested in Everything.

I have known few men whose intellectual interests were as wide as his. He could have made his own the words of the old Roman dramatist: "There's nothing appertaining to man which does not interest me." He sought out men who were authorities in different provinces of thought and action and to such he was an insatiable asker of questions. Thus he filled his intellectual reservoirs with fresh water from many fountains. His mind was ever alert and active, and he not only learned from others but did his own observing and thinking. He kept his face set forward. But finer still than his large-mindedness was his large-heartedness. There are men whose intellectual horizons are broad, but whose interest is in ideas and not in people, and whose sympathies with their fellow creatures are undeveloped and inactive. To this class of half-made men General Palmer did not belong. He loved his fellowmen not only collectively but individually.

He stands peculiar and pre-eminent as we all know among the rich men of the Rocky mountain country for the variety and munificence of his public benefactions. But the extent of his private benefactions is known only to the Father who seeth in secret. Known [illegible] something of their variety and amplitude, the best description that [illegible]

PALMER'S OWN STORY OF FOUNDING OF SPRINGS

the passengers, an old Missourian with iron-gray beard, who might be taken without difficulty for John Brown, formulated it thus, as we approached the scene of the "Sand Creek massacre": "I wish Chivington had got them all. I don't owe them anything and they have been close enough on me very often." As it seemed desirable to show that at least there was a countervlew, I quoted for their benefit the then recent declaration of Wendell Phillips: "If are the Indians have begun scalping on the Pacific railroads. This is a move in the right direction." The effect of this bomb shell was to draw forth from the inside passengers a pretty unanimous declaration that it would be a move in the right direction if the Indians or somebody else would begin scalping Mr. Phillips' hair, which goes to show how much a matter of longitude is opinion.

Pueblo, July 28, '69.

We rode all night across from the "Smoky Hill" fork, and have been all day until now 10 p. m.—coming up the Arkansas valley. In a few moments we go on to Denver by way of Colorado City, and should reach there by this time to-morrow night.

Just before supper we came in sight of the mountains Pike's Peak, Spanish Peaks and the Greenhorn range. A thunderstorm rang on and the clouds threw themselves into grand and fantastic shapes, blending with the mountains, so as scarcely to be distinguishable. We have just crossed a pretty river called the Fountain, out Boodle up, which we shall travel all night, reaching the foot of Pike's Peak by breakfast time.

First View Here.

July 28, '69. Denver.

After another night and day ride from Pueblo I reached here at 6 last night. For 120 miles from the Arkansas we drove along not far from the base and generally within full view of the Rocky mountains. The night ride was by moonlight. I spread out my blankets on top of the coach, back of a capable driver, and slept soundly in the fresh keen air until awakened perhaps by the round moon looking steadily in my face, when I found the magnificent Pike's Peak towering immediately above at an elevation of 14,000 feet and topped with a little snow. I could not sleep any more with all of the splendid panorama of mountains gradually unrolling as the moon faded and the sun began to rise, but sleepy as I was, sat up and drank in along with the draughts of pure air the full exhilaration of that early morning ride. At Colorado City—The Garden of the Gods—we stopped to breakfast. I freshened up by a preliminary bath in the waters of the Fountain. Near here are the finest of soda springs and the most enticing scenery. I am sure there will be a famous summer resort here soon after the railroad reaches Denver.

There is a little forest of pine occasionally, and the sight is gladdened by the rude but comfortable farm houses which are dotted almost continuously from the Arkansas to the matte. I somehow fancy that an exploration of the 'Monument' to the Fountain might disclose somewhere up near where they come leaping with delight from the cavernous wall of the Rocky mountains some charming spot, where one perhaps might make his future home.

Conceives Railroad.

On a further visit the next month, I noted that this section is near to the line of a railroad that in a few years must be built from Denver southward to the Arkansas, and so on by the San Luis park to Mexico.

This was the first distinct conception on my part of the Denver & Rio Grande railway, which ripened into a definite plan on the completion of the Kansas Pacific railway into Denver the following year.

On this August trip while ascending the Arkansas between the Animas and Pueblo, our coach stopped at a station known as the "12-Mile Point," where we had an interview of three-quarters of an hour sitting on the sill of the stable of which he was stock-tender, with a very remarkable character, James White, who just came through the Grand Canon of the Colorado on a raft just two years before, and whom my surveying party had met at Fort Mojave, in Arizona, shortly afterward, when we first learned his story—how he had [illegible] the 3 [illegible] 60 miles of a journey at the bottom of a trough of rock from 20 to 40 times as deep as Niagara is high, with walls nearly precipitous, and affording no outlet for nearly two weeks, as he sailed on a raft of rude logs tied together with lariats.

In September, with the engineers under Colonel Greenwood, I rode from Sheridan across the plains directly to this spot, our object being to ascertain whether an advantageous route could not be found for the Kansas Pacific railway, enabling it to "reach shore" sooner, and striking the mountain base somewhere hereabouts, to follow it [illegible] an impassable country to Denver. We were some ten days on this reconnaissance, during which we met considerable buffalo, three bands of wild horses, and antelope in such number that we were scarcely out of sight of them in day time from the Kansas border up to the present townsite of Colorado Springs. Dr. Bell and Colonel Greene were along, and the following day after ascending some knobs at and around the springs, we rode through the garden of the Gods into Glen Eyrie, and across by Monument park to "Tracks out," where we spent the night, and then rode on to Denver, shooting 1 [illegible] antelope on a hay-stack, one night on the "West Plum."

The Fountain Colony.

Following is General Palmer's account of the founding of Colorado Springs, with some early experiences.

"The prospectus of The Fountain Colony was issued in June, '70. I have been not infrequently impressed with the uniformity in tone of colony prospectuses and suppose they have always been more or less alike. I have even observed, I think, in the early letters of William Penn, from his new settlement in Pennsylvania, which I was once shown by a friend in his English country house, a family resemblance to our own humble rehearsal, showing how like hopes and requirements in diverse ages tend to produce like behavior. Not that there was the least symptom of exaggeration in the tone of the great Quaker, whatever criticism may be justly passed on ours.

"I remember when a boy in Pennsylvania finding in an old paper mill awaiting conversion a prospectus of 'Cairo,' which began in this exhilarating way: 'In casting the eye over the map of the globe, one is struck by the commanding importance of certain points and their fitness to be the centers of great wealth and population. Among these are London, Pekin, New York, Cairo in Egypt, and Cairo in Illinois.' At least after that, our own exordium seems modest enough. The colony was declared to 'embrace a tract of ten thousand acres of arable valley lands.' 'The spot selected embraces the healthiest part of the healthful climate of Colorado.' 'The mineral waters are unequaled and the scenery [illegible].' 'The adjoining lands near the town will be cut into small subdivisions for gardening and fruit growing.' 'The valley farming lands are equal in richness to any in the United States and all that can be raised will be consumed by invalids at the Springs, tourists visiting the locality, the miners of South Park and by the fifteen sawmills running on the Divide and in the mountains on the west.' 'As a trade point Colorado Springs is destined to be one of the prominent places in Colorado, having an extensive country to supply, rich in mines and timber, while east of us for 120 miles is an immense stock-grazing country.' 'There are excellent hunting grounds close at hand, while the plains to the eastward are full of antelope.' 'A coal mine and an excellent stone quarry not distant, abundant timber for wood and fence posts on the mountain sides,' and so forth.

Has Fulfilled Promises.

"Although the arable resources have failed to justify all of those early hopes, and the lumber has long since been cut off, it may be truthfully said that in most other particulars of that manifesto, and especially as to the requirements for what Emerson calls a 'good corner stand,' Colorado [illegible] the glowing promises held out at the beginning.

"The colony was now fairly launched, and the old log cabin which Governor Hunt had built the previous winter as our headquarters, began to see plenty of neighbors. We lived at first in tents on the townsite. One of the first buildings to go up was my own office on the east side of Tejon, near Huerfano street. This established a sort of rallying point in the general vacancy. The Colorado Springs hotel, opposite where the Antlers now is, was opened for Christmas, '71. Mrs. Palmer kept the first school, at the northeast corner of Cascade and Bijou, opening it with six pupils in October of November. By spring these had increased to thirty or forty. The home at Glen Eyrie was begun in September, '71, and occupied in January. Meanwhile the big irrigation ditch was being built by Colonel Nettleton.

First Newspaper.

"By February, '72, the population was 500. The first newspaper, the 'Out West,' was started in April, '72. The editor, Mr. Liller, a Chester man, was recommended to us by Charles Kingsley, and proved to be one of the most useful of our early citizens. He was a well-trained man, with a high standard of sense, taste, and purpose. After a year the name of the paper was changed to the Colorado Springs Gazette. This first year 5,000 trees were set out along the streets. Churches went up rapidly. A lot had been reserved for each denomination, to be given free, on condition of building a church [illegible] first come, first served."

Foreseeing that controversies about water would arise, a small committee was sent down the Fountain to take careful note of all of the ditches, their capacity, and of what land was cultivated under them. The amount was infinitesimal. Later, when disputes arose, I believe it was not possible to show that less water ran down the Fountain than before, as the colony tract was a perfect sieve,

Three Months' Treatment FREE

(MEDICINES EXCEPTED)

WILL BE GIVEN BY

The New York Doctors

Beginning Monday morning at nine o'clock and continuing for one week, the New York Doctors announce that they will examine all patients free of charge and contract to treat them for three months also free except for a small charge for medicines.

This is in accordance with their usual fall and winter policy and is for the purpose of adding as many cured patients to their list as possible. Three months is the usual time required to cure the average curable chronic disease, and after an experience of nearly six years in the treatment of chronic diseases in Colorado Springs, they have found that the cures they can make in the winter months will keep them busy with patients recommended by these cures for the balance of the year.

There is no string attached to this offer. All you have to do is to call at the offices of the New York Doctors any day this week and be examined, which will cost you nothing. After your examination, your case will be explained to you. You will be told whether you can be cured or not, or if there is a doubt, you will be given an opinion. Your name will not be published in the paper, nor will you be asked to sign a testimonial. We know that if we can cure you that you will be grateful enough to tell your friends. We have done this for nearly six years and are seldom disappointed in cured cases bringing us new patients.

The New York Doctors are SPECIALISTS in the treatment of the CHRONIC DISEASES OF MEN, WOMEN AND CHILDREN. They have attained this name by having first prepared themselves through study and practice, to treat chronic diseases equipped an office with the best of instruments, which comprise most of the modern electrical apparatus and mechanical appliances now used, and finally by curing hundreds of cases. Their success has been due entirely to their hard painstaking work and to their superior office equipment. Their methods are, in most cases, those that have originated and have been indorsed by the large universities of both Europe and America. For instance:

In the treatment of CONSUMPTION and ALL TUBERCULAR troubles, they use the IMPROVED FRENCH TRANSFUSION METHOD, which was discovered in France some seven years ago and is now used by physicians in nearly all large cities in this country.

Just to give you a faint idea of some of the diseases they treat we will enumerate a few of them: ASTHMA, CATARRH, RHEUMATISM, GOITER, Growths of all kinds (except cancer), Diseases of the STOMACH, BOWELS, LIVER, KIDNEY and BLADDER troubles, DISEASES OF WOMEN (without operations in most cases), NERVOUSNESS, DISEASES of the SKIN and BLOOD and special DISEASES of MEN.

No matter what your trouble is let us talk it over with you. Consultation is free.

McNeill by a majority of 45, the vote standing Kasson, 181; McNeill, 139. In ward 5, Leonard Jackson defeated S. H. Cheadle by 81 votes. The total vote was: Jackson, 233; Cheadle, 152. The fight against Kasson in ward 3 was keenly waged, but in precinct 5, Kasson's home precinct, all but three of the 91 votes cast went to Kasson, whereas in precinct 3, McNeill's home precinct, Kasson got 39, as against 65 for McNeill.

Tribute to Jackson.

In ward 5, where the fight between Jackson and Cheadle was equally keen, a high tribute was paid to Jackson in his home precinct, where he received a total of 93 and his opponent only one vote. It was this precinct which decided the election, since in two others Cheadle had substantial majorities.

Besides indorsing the candidates for aldermen in the various wards, the voters elected delegates to the city conventions, and also precinct committeemen. The Republican city convention will be held in the court house tomorrow morning at 10 o'clock. The Democratic convention will be called to order at the same place on Thursday morning at 10 o'clock. The Republicans elected 154 delegates and the Democrats 73.

In Republican circles last night the opinion seemed to prevail that W. H. Spurgeon is certain to be the choice of the convention as candidate for Mayor, E. L. Briggs for city engineer, E. C. F. Whitaker for city clerk, F. A. Bartholomew for city treasurer, and W. J. Price for city attorney, the last three of whom are present incumbents. C. W. Dolph, at the solicitation of his friends, has announced his candidacy for the city attorneyship and the struggle will probably be between him and City Attorney Price, with the chances in favor of Dolph. The race for the nomination for city auditor lies between Fred Parkhill, the present assistant in the office, C. F. Grimes and E. W. Ryer, clerk in the health department.

Dizziness A Danger Signal

Forerunners of More Serious Conditions of the Alimentary Tract.

Invariably flatulence and dizziness indicate the beginning of serious troubles, stomach and intestine troubles usually follow, which sooner or later develop symptoms of an alarming nature. Catarr of the stomach, gastritis, constipation, piles, liver troubles and a general break-down of the health usually follow these symptoms when left to run their full course. When [illegible] performing its proper duty the rest of the system is sure to suffer. As it is a well-known fact that the stomach feeds the rest of the body and organs, therefore many other diseases may arise, either directly or indirectly from disorder of the stomach.

Whenever there is the slightest indications of flatulence or dizziness noticed it should be cared for at once that it may not develop more dangerous symptoms. Charcoal is an excellent remedy for the stomach, relieving flatulence by absorbing the poisonous gases that accumulate in the stomach, and aiding digestion and assimilation; it has a specific action upon this organ, and a very rapid and positive action on the system in general.

Charcoal has been used for several thousand years, both as a stomach regulator and an antidote for poisons taken in the stomach. The success of charcoal is unquestionable. The only remaining question is to get charcoal in the most convenient and palatable form. The F. A. Stuart Co. manufacture a charcoal lozenge composed of young willow wood charcoal and pure honey, making this valuable product convenient palatable and perfectly harmless. A sample will be sent on request or Stuart's Charcoal Tablets can be had at any drug store. Price 25c per box. The F. A. Stuart Co., 200 Stuart Bldg., Marshall, Mich.

Bad Feeling Exists

It is understood that bad feeling existed between Aldermen Frost and Holden for some time. The trouble started last summer, when Holden introduced a resolution calling for a special committee to investigate the conduct of the water system. Frost, since he is a member of the water committee, took this as a personal reflection upon himself. It was this resolution, addressed to the various civic bodies of the city, that brought forth the appointment of the citizens' committee and its startling "subsequent revelations."

This is Holden's second consecutive term in the Council. Four years ago he was elected president of that body and is now chairman of the finance committee. He is not a candidate for reelection. Frost, who is a candidate for reelection on the Democratic ticket, was for many years during the early days of Colorado Springs, connected with its water department. Holden represents the Seventh and Frost the Eighth wards.

ALDERMAN FROST HITS HOLDEN WITH SEAL

Mayor T. S. Fertig's private office, at an executive session of the members of the City Council. Acting Mayor Charles T. Fertig and Aldermen A. M. Hill and E. B. Hosman were present and witnessed the trouble.

What Caused Trouble.

The altercation grew out of the letting of a contract for trees to be set out in city parks. Holden favored letting the contract, it is said, to B. F. Lee. Frost claimed that Lee was not the lowest bidder, and accused Holden of being inconsistent. He said it had been only a short time since Holden was very particular about letting all contracts to the lowest bidders.

"You're a liar," Holden is reported to have said. Losing his temper, Frost seized the heavy metal city seal from the Mayor's table and struck him over the head.

Casson seized Frost by the shoulders and Fertig supported and held Holden. In a moment the combatants were separated and Holden was taken to Dr. Hanford's office and later went home. Frost remained and attended the Council meeting.

MUCH PRODDING OF ANIMALS IN SENATE

HARSH REMARKS EXCHANGED AMONG MEMBERS.

Special to The Gazette.

DENVER, March 13.—Prodding the animals was the main business of the senators this morning. First Senator Carpenter of Greeley, Republican, found that a "joshing" remark he had made on the floor the day before had been taken seriously by a morning Democratic organ, so that he was pictured on the first page as having gone to Tramway headquarters for his orders on certain matters. On a question of personal privilege he paid his compliments to the newspaper.

Then came an allusion by Senator Crowley that angered the lieutenant governor. Some days ago the Senate sent governor asked for an opinion of the attorney general on his right to break a tie in the senate by casting the deciding vote, and the attorney general decided he did not have that right. After he had declined to vote, he was in the Governor's office, where the latter's private secretary showed him a bundle of opinions that seemed to controvert the position of the attorney general. Mr. Fitzgerald, in his free conversational manner then said something in this line: "Why do you show me that now? It is just the way with you fellows. After it is all over you can tell a whole lot of things I would like to have known before. It would have been worth lots to me to have known that before my decision."

DR. GREGG PAYS BEAUTIFUL TRIBUTE

to me is the words of our Savior, "Freely ye have received, freely give."

The sympathetic quality of his nature appeared in the wide hospitality which he loved to exercise. In his long residence in England, he had learned the secret which so few Americans have acquired, of great achievement without hurry or feverish excitement. To spend a few days at Glen Eyrie was a rest and refreshment akin to that supplied by an ocean voyage. His hospitalities and friendships were determined not by wealth or social position, but by the intellectual and moral worth of those whom he delighted to gather about him. Reverses might overtake friends of earlier years, but that made no difference in his regard and consideration for them. He was blessedly gifted with a keen sense of humor, and that was mingled, as it generally is, with a broad charitableness of spirit and sweetness of disposition which made him a delightful companion. He was a good story-teller and appreciative of a good story, and under a grave exterior his ever was the merry heart that doeth good like a medicine.

Sincere in All Things.

In happy union with his great heart and quick and tender and broad sympathies, went an inherent and so to speak constitutional sincerity that perfected his character. As I think of the rare and precious connection of qualities that are often disastrously separated, was shown in him, there comes to my mind the sentence of the psalmist, "Mercy and truth are met together, righteousness and peace have kissed each other." The issue was a magnanimity of nature which was as a cordial to one exposed to and depressed by the littleness of mankind. His conversation moved in a realm above personalities. I do not remember ever to have heard him speak a word of detraction or sharp or bitter censure of any man.

One of General Palmer's charms was his simplicity. Living in a stately and ample way as became the wealth at his command, there was no trace of vulgar ostentation. He had no inclination to live in the world's eye. He chose rather to live apart and secluded from the world's eye. He did nothing to be seen of men. No trumpets were blown before his alms. His life was a life of large achievement and of great public service, but it was a life singularly unobtrusive and retiring. He was compact of modesty. All these fine and rare traits combined to make him a man of notable clearness of insight and soundness of judgment. What General Palmer thought, and still more, what he said—for he though; much before he spoke—carried weight. In his intellectual processes there was such carefulness and thoroughness, so broad a survey of the whole field, of possible future outcomes as well as of present conditions, and such consideration of the rights of all, that his convictions were impressive even when they did not prevail.

He had in marked degree the true Quaker idealism, which insists that the ultimate good is just as attainable now as twenty-five or fifty or a hundred or a thousand years hence, and can not believe that in morals as in traveling, the longest way round is sometimes the shortest way home. General Palmer came of Quaker stock. If I mistake not he was disciplined by his monthly meeting for going into the army. But in the temper of his mind he was ever loyal to the faith in which he was reared. As I consider his simplicity, his strength of moral conviction, his independence, his quiet unobtrusiveness, his sincerity and his all-embracing sympathy, it seems to me that in this great and good man who has passed from among us, no better designation can be found than this. He was a friend, a friend to all.

Dr. Mary R. Noble, a returned medical missionary, gave an interesting address on "Work Among the Women of India," and the president, Mrs. Slocum, made a few appropriate remarks in regard to the society, which has for a number of years been an important auxiliary to Colorado College.

MEN TO BLAME IN MOST DIVORCE CASES

JUDGE MORRIS GIVES OPINION OF MARITAL TROUBLES.

Says in Nine Cases Out of 10 It Is the Wife Who Suffers for Sake of Home.

"It is my experience that in nine cases out of ten where it comes to a question of homes being broken up the fault lies with the husband," said Judge W. S. Morris in the district court yesterday, when rendering judgment in the divorce suit brought by Frank Drummer of La Molle, Ill., who obtained a decree of divorce from his wife, Lottie Drummer, on the charge of desertion. The evidence showed that the wife had left her husband on four occasions and as often had been forgiven and taken back. Both the parties were present, the wife having contested the case for alimony, and Judge Morris took occasion to point out the merits of the respective contestants.

"As a general rule," he said, "this is a hard court for husbands in divorce suits, for in all my experience as a practitioner and a judge, I have found that in 49 cases out of 50 it is the wife who has to suffer in the holding together of the home, the wife who has to forgive the shortcomings of the man and beseech him to return to her. But in this case the evidence shows plainly that the wife never bore to her husband the love that was sufficient for the founding of the home while the husband seemed to have loved her to a fault, if such is possible. This is one of the most painful cases I have ever had to deal with, because there seems to have been no flagrant offense, such as infidelity, on the part of either husband or wife. I feel that a reconciliation is not possible for the reason that this woman has never had the love for this man and has not now the love essential in the maintaining of every home."

In granting the divorce, Judge Morris awarded alimony to the wife of $15 a month, the first installment to be paid June 1. The case has been in the district court for several months, the wife having been in North Dakota when the husband entered the suit. Mrs. Drummer succeeded in getting a court order for $25 a month temporary alimony and $50 for her expenses to Colorado Springs. She arrived here last week.

ROCK ISLAND FORCE LIKELY TO BE TRANSFERRED.

Burning of Big Depot at Goodland, Kansas, Necessitates Some Kind of Change.

The removal of division headquarters of the Rock Island railroad from Goodland, Kan., to Colorado Springs until the big depot destroyed by fire at Goodland last Friday afternoon has been rebuilt, is a plan being considered by officials of the road, according to a report that reached here yesterday. The most of the division offices and the train dispatcher's offices were in the building which burned, and it is believed that the temporary quarters they are now occupying will prove inadequate. In this event they will probably be removed to Colorado Springs until the new depot building is erected. This would bring a force of about 30 dispatchers and clerks to Colorado Springs. As the present quarters here are crowded, it would be necessary to rent a building in the downtown district or the entire floor of an office block if it could be secured.

The depot at Goodland was completely destroyed, the loss being estimated at about $75,000. The cause of the fire is not known. The building was a large brick structure, and besides being used as a passenger depot and hotel, contained the offices of many other departments of the road.

During the height of the fire there seemed to be danger that the big round houses and car shops of the Rock Island, situated just across the tracks, might suffer, but the fire was confined to the depot.

Officials of the railway are said to have stated that the work of rebuilding the depot will be pushed with all possible speed.

A Life-Long Friend's VIEW OF PALMER

Major McAllister Tells of His Conspicuous Bravery in War and in Peace.

Found Never Did Others to Do What He Himself Was Unwilling to Undertake—Had Brilliant Army Record.

THE following account of General Palmer's career was written by The Gazette by Major McAllister of this city, who for nearly a half century has been a close friend and associate of the late philanthropist. Major McAllister served in General Palmer's regiment from its organization in the summer of 1862 until the close of the war, enlisting as a private and being promoted successively to orderly sergeant, first lieutenant, captain and major. Near the close of the war, when Palmer was promoted to a brigadier-generalship, he selected Major McAllister as his assistant adjutant general, or chief of staff. The friendship formed during this intimate association has been continued ever since, and there is probably no man better fitted to write of the career of General Palmer than the author of this article.

The death of General William Jackson Palmer at his home in Glen Eyrie will cause profound sorrow not alone in this immediate community which he has lived for thirty-six years, but throughout the State of Colorado to whose great and rapid development he has contributed more than any man or set of men. Philadelphia, New York and the centers of Europe will hear with regret of the death of the great business man and financier.

Even a condensed biography of the life of General Palmer would require a volume of no mean proportions. To condense it to fit the Procrustean bed of the columns of a daily newspaper must of necessity be difficult and unsatisfactory.

General Palmer was born at Kinver, Kent county, Delaware, September 17, 1836. His parents were John and Matilda Jackson Palmer. Besides the General there were two sons, Frank and Charles, and a daughter, all of whom are dead.

When William was quite young he was sent to Philadelphia and for a few years attended the common schools in that city. He never attended the higher institutions of learning, but when sixteen years of age became attached to surveying parties employed by the Pennsylvania Railroad company, then engaged in extending its lines in the western part of the State. A few years later he became connected with the operating department of the road at Altoona, Pa. For some time prior to the breaking out of the Civil war he served in the capacity of private secretary to J. Edgar Thompson, president of the Pennsylvania Railroad company, in Philadelphia.

Of Quaker Parentage.

The General's parents were prominent and consistent members of the religious society of Friends or Quakers and their children were birthright members of that society. This religious sect had an inborn hatred of the institution of slavery, and condemned in their quiet way the northern men and women who, for business considerations or moral cowardice, apologized for or openly supported the aggressive movements of the slave power. The antislavery doctrines of Friends, however, ended with their moral opposition to that institution; they were equally opposed to war and bloodshed. The most exemplary of them were willing to pay exorbitant prices for free sugar, free rice and free dress goods, rather than touch the product of slave labor. They desired before anything in the world to see slavery overthrown, but were willing to face continuously and death rather than raise an arm to abolish it by force. The younger members of the sect, however, in common with other less nonresisting people, became restive in 1859-60 under the constant and irritating insults and threats of northern "doughfaces" backed by the thousands of southern students who filled the medical and law schools and other institutions of learning in all the large northern cities. Of the mayor of Philadelphia and a very large number of the business men it may almost be said that at that time they favored "peace at any price." Millions of dollars were due northern manufacturers and merchants from southern houses, and in case of war this indebtedness was sure to be swept away. This made cowards of men who, a year or two later, marched without a tremor up to the cannon's mouth.

Started a Lecture Course.

In the winter of 1859-60 General Palmer and several of his young friends formed a literary society for the purpose of arranging a course of antislavery, with least liberal, lectures in Philadelphia, by such men as Henry Ward Beecher, Wendell Phillips and George William Curtis. The last two only left a memory. The lecture of Phillips was delivered in November, 1859, and he was not seriously molested. Before the day fixed for Mr. Curtis's lecture, December 23, the greatest excitement prevailed. John Brown had been hung two weeks before and antislavery and proslavery feeling was at fever heat. Six hundred policemen were sent to the hall to protect the speaker and preserve order. A body guard of young men of which General Palmer was one was formed to look after the personal safety of Mr. Curtis. A thousand armed men, determined to break up the meeting, surrounded the hall. During the lecture, which lasted less than an hour, stones, bottles of vitriol and other missiles were hurled through the windows, and nothing but the numbers and determination of the police force prevented a great loss of life and property. Thus did General Palmer and his young friends vindicate free speech in Philadelphia.

Anderson Troop Organized.

Early in the autumn of 1861, a few months after the beginning of the Civil war, General Palmer organized a select body of young men, about one hundred in number, for special service in the field. In a paper relative to the organization of this body General Palmer stated that "the special duty of the Troop (in addition to the service on the field of battle) will be to perform detachment service of all kinds in Brigadier General Anderson's department, to serve as escort or body guard to the General when desired; make reconnoissances; escort trains and convoys; make arrests; seize railroads etc.; perform advanced post or patrol duty; and generally, to be attached to the General for the performance of any special service required by him involving delicacy or danger." This troop, of which General Palmer was the captain, was named the Anderson Troop in honor of General Anderson, the hero of Fort Sumter, then commanding in Kentucky, under whose eye it was to serve. The troop left Carlisle, Pa., in December 1861, and upon arrival in Louisville, Ky., was assigned to General Buell, who had succeeded General Anderson in command of the Department of the Cumberland. For over six months the troop performed the most laborious and active service throughout Kentucky, Tennessee and northern Alabama.

Service Within the Enemy's Lines.

In July, 1862, General Palmer obtained permission to return to Pennsylvania and raise a regiment of cavalry for special and independent service. About nine hundred recruits had been sent to Carlisle, Pa., to be drilled, when the enemy suddenly invaded Maryland. General Palmer hurried to the front with the available men, and was present at the battle of Antietam, September 17. After the battle the men of the regiment who were engaged were sent back to Carlisle, but General Palmer, ever anxious to do everything possible to serve his country at whatever risk, with the consent of the commanding general disguised himself in civilian's attire and followed the retreating confederate army into Virginia. He was soon captured and sent to Richmond where for nearly four months he was confined in an old tobacco warehouse called Castle Thunder. The account of his capture, his efforts to escape and all the intensely interesting details of his stay in Libby are so admirably told in "The General's Story," the version having been authorized by him, that it is unnecessary to allude further to it here.

On the 7th of February, 1863, the General returned to the regiment then encamped at Nashville, Tenn. From that time until the close, guided, under its indefatigable and indomitable leader, the regiment led a life of strenuous activity. Day and night in storm and sunshine it hurried on, always in advance of our armies, skirmishing all day and riding through and over rebel camps at midnight. Scores of men, from sheer exhaustion slept in their saddles, but were awakened by flying shots and clashing sabers in front, where General Palmer always rode.

Strenuous Campaigning.

Horses by hundreds sank down beneath their riders, and became the prey of vultures and buzzards, their places being filled from the nearest stables or fields for the regiment always lived off the enemy's country. For an hour or two during the day or night the men were allowed to rest and eat, and it was frequently a question with them which they would do first, lie down or eat. Every day or two, the regiment marched about forty thousand miles through the forests, over the mountains, across fields and over the rivers of ten great states. When the ranks were reduced by death and health destroying hardships to a few hundreds, recruits were sent from home to fill the vacant places.

A brave and brilliant lieutenant who had been assigned to one company after another to take the places of disabled officers, becoming responsible for the equipment of each company to which he was temporarily assigned, once remonstrated with the general against what he considered an unfair assignment. When asked what the general said in reply, he answered, "He looked me straight in the face apparently astonished and said, 'Lieutenant, did you join the army to avoid responsibility and hardships?'"

This answer reminds one of that made by a great Moslem writer to one of his officers who asked for rest from the intolerable labor devolved upon him: "Oh! Omar, there will be time to rest in the world to come."

Fearless, but Never Rash.

But General Palmer never asked one of his command to do what he himself was not willing to do, either in the way of incessant toil or exposure to extreme danger. He was absolutely fearless, but never rash or indiscreet. He was perfectly willing to sacrifice his life and the lives of his men if something more valuable to the country than his or their lives would result from the sacrifice. This was shown at Chickamauga when the Union line was broken directly in front of General Rosecrans' headquarters. General Palmer thought that the broken line might be reformed on the hill west of the Chattanooga road, if the rebel advance could be temporarily checked, and so important did he consider this that he urged General Rosecrans to allow him to throw his regiment against the compact Confederate forces advancing with the "rebel yell" of victory up the hill. Had Rosecrans answer to Palmer's appeal been "Yes" instead of "No," the townsite of Colorado Springs would still be a grassy prairie.

On one occasion in passing along a trail through a dense thicket in east Tennessee, a tremendous musketry fire was opened upon the head of the column by an ambushed enemy. There was no opportunity to oppose the attack. The regiment reined up its horses, turned calmly in the saddle, asked its guide a few questions, turned off upon an obscure trail, until then unnoticed, and led the regiment to a safe position without material loss. During the attack a cattle ball struck the general's horse in the mouth, carrying away all the upper teeth.

Nothing Escaped His Eye.

One of the most important duties devolved upon General Palmer by the department commanders was that of examining and marking out the country in advance of the army. To this most important work he was peculiarly fitted by his early training as a civil engineer. In this scouting service nothing escaped his vigilant eye. The character of the soil, water, timber, fuel, forage, made their general directions; the strength of the bridges, the depth of the streams, all were carefully noted and sketched, and were absolutely reliable. Every officer in the regiment was directed, was compelled, to be thus observing. An incident showing the importance of the information thus gathered may be cited.

When the rebel general, Hood, marched his army around General Sherman at Atlanta and moved rapidly along the railroad in Sherman's rear toward Chattanooga, he was closely followed by the latter, who believed that Hood would soon turn east, pass around his right flank and again move south toward Atlanta. When Sherman reached Resaca he found General Rousseau, who had held the fort against Hood. With Rousseau was a captain of General Palmer's regiment and his company of cavalry on detached duty. Sherman sent this officer at once to follow Hood at a safe distance to learn, if possible, what the latter proposed to do. The captain returned in thirty hours and at once sought an interview with General Sherman, whom he found at midnight alone in his tent. The following conversation took place:

Sherman (anxiously)—"Well, captain, what have you learned—is Hood going east or west?"

Captain—"To the west, general, by way of Lafayette."

Sherman—"Why do you think he is not going east?"

Captain—"Because he would have to cross both the Coosanaula and Coosawatte rivers, and you are pushing him so hard that he has no time to bridge them."

Sherman—"But why did you think there might be fords?"

Captain—"There is a ford over the Coosawatte at ——— house, and also over the Coosawatte at ——— plantation; but the beds of both streams at these fords are muddy and the crossing of a few troops would wash them away."

Sherman—"Well, why do you think he is going west?"

Captain—"Because nearly the whole army is now living on the pith of the sorghum cane. I saw quantities of the pith which had been chewed and spit out wherever they bivouacked. They can not live thus long, and I have learned that for a week they have been storing flour and corn meal at Lafayette, Gordon's mill. And I found lookout mountain. My belief is that Hood will cross northern Alabama and perhaps central Tennessee."

Sherman—"Captain, you are a native of Georgia."

Captain—"No, I am an officer of the Fifteenth Pennsylvania cavalry."

Sherman—"Why that's Palmer's regiment. Palmer is a model cavalry officer. Good night! You know more about Georgia than any native of the state I have met."

In a few days Sherman resumed his march to the sea, and in a few weeks Hood's army appeared before Nashville.

What Thomas Thought of Him

That great general, George H. Thomas, the "Rock of Chickamauga," than whom there was no better judge, remarked to his chief of staff, after reading one of General Palmer's reports of a series of cavalry engagements in which he had participated: "Palmer is the best cavalry officer in the service." "You would except ———, would you not?" said the staff officer, naming a cavalry general of world-wide renown. "I would except no one," said Thomas, "but would feel more comfortable if Palmer were always in my front. I would never fear surprises."

The report which elicited the above remark was that of General Palmer of his pursuit of Hood after the latter's defeat at Nashville. Crossing the Tennessee river at Decatur with six hundred men in a fierce snow storm he pressed on, scattering Reddy's force and capturing two pieces of artillery. Then with his command at a trot or gallop, he pressed forward along the south bank of the Tennessee, overtaking several bodies of rebels, capturing 200 prisoners, including two colonels, three captains and eight lieutenants, and destroying 750 small arms. Pursuing his course with a celerity seldom equaled by a body of cavalry, he entered Mississippi during a night of pitchy darkness, captured and destroyed 78 pontoon boats and 200 wagons loaded with valuable stores. Hearing of the proximity of a large rebel cavalry force, he rushed [illegible] station, capturing ten more wagons; thence on to the Tuscaloosa road, surprising and routing Colonel Russell's regiment of cavalry and destroying another large train. Successfully eluding large bodies of the enemy he brought all his prisoners into Decatur, losing but one man killed and two wounded, the very energy and boldness of the general's attacks conducing to the safety of his troops.

Captured General Vance.

Another illustration of General Palmer's celerity of action may be given. In [illegible] General Vance of [illegible] with a force of 500 rebel [illegible] Mary of Cherokee Indians. Advancing to Saltsville he captured a train of twenty wagons and many men and started immediately for North Carolina.

As soon as General Palmer, who was twelve miles away, heard of the raid he took a hundred and twenty-five of his best mounted men and started in pursuit. Moving rapidly over a very rough country for thirty miles he came upon Vance just as he had reached the foot of the Smoky range. Drawing sabers, and with a shout that echoed among the hills, Palmer's command attacked the enemy, cutting his way clear through his force from rear to front, capturing General Vance, two of his staff officers, sixty men, one hundred and fifty horses and recapturing the entire wagon train and prisoners. General Foster, commanding at Knoxville, declared that this was the most gallant affair that ever came to his notice.

In the spring of 1865 General Palmer was promoted to brigadier general and placed in command of the Fifteenth Pennsylvania, the Tenth Michigan and Twelfth Ohio cavalry regiments. This brigade became a part of General Stanewall's cavalry division, and late in March, 1865, the whole body crossed over Blue Ridge into North Carolina. Thence moving north it entered Virginia near Lynchburg. During the month of April, 1865, General Palmer's brigade was constantly fighting, burning bridges and tearing up railroad tracks. Many towns were captured, including Salisbury, North Carolina, where immense rebel stores were destroyed.

Pursuit of Jefferson Davis.

Near the end of April intelligence of the capture of Richmond having been received, General Palmer was ordered by Edwin M. Stanton, secretary of war, by special dispatch via Knoxville to "pursue Jefferson Davis to the end of the earth." Then began that celebrated pursuit, which was pushed night and day with untiring energy and skill. Daily some member of Mr. Davis' party were picked up. Through both the Carolinas and into Georgia the chase continued. In a thicket in the latter state seven wagons were captured containing many millions of dollars in gold, bank notes and other securities, including the private papers of Generals Beauregard and Pillow. These valuables were sent to General Upton at Augusta, and thence to Washington. After the war they were returned in the exact condition with the loss of a dollar. On the 10th of May, 1865, news was received of the capture of Mr. Davis by Colonel Pritchard of the Fourth Michigan Cavalry, into whose arms he had been driven by General Palmer.

The war being over General Palmer's regiment started northward by easy marches. On the twelfth of June it reached Nashville, and was mustered out there on the twenty-first of June, 1865.

Near the close of the war while at Huntsville, Alabama, General Palmer was waited upon by a distinguished party of southern gentlemen connected with the Memphis and Charleston Railroad, who offered him the presidency of that company. It was a splendid compliment, an intelligent recognition of his matchless executive ability. The General informed them, however, that when the war ended he intended to return to Philadelphia and look over the business field there, and until then he would make no arrangements.

Resumed Railroad Work.

Soon after his return home he accepted the office of executive director of the Kansas branch of the Union Pacific railroad, which had then been built a short distance west out of Kansas City, and had apparently become stranded there. The General took hold with his usual energy and ability and soon from one to three miles of track were being laid a day. When the road had reached a point near Kit Carson, the General strongly urged the management to build southwest to Santa Fe, thence via the thirty-fifth parallel to the Pacific ocean. With a small party the General rode on horseback over the entire distance. The directors, however, hesitated to build the line without a government subsidy in land and credit. General Palmer tried for two or three years to secure such assistance, but such grants to railroads were becoming unpopular, and the effort was unsuccessful. In the meantime the road was finished to Denver.

For some time prior to the completion of the Kansas Pacific road, the General had been nursing in his fertile mind the idea of building a north and south line of road along the base of the Rocky mountains, from Denver to the Rio Grande river with branches running into the mountains through every available pass. In speaking to a friend upon the subject, he said: "I believe that the mineral and other resources of the Rocky mountains are very great, beyond our present conception, and my idea is to tap the mountains wherever possible with branch lines running from a main line along the mountain base."

In pursuance of that idea the building of the Denver and Rio Grande railroad was begun at Denver early in 1871 and carried forward, with some delays incident to financial disturbances, to its present vast ramifications. The Denver and Rio Grande railroad in conception and growth is entirely the product of General Palmer's brain. While occupied in constructing that line he built the Mexico National, and later the Denver and Rio Grande Western.

Other vast subsidiary projects were shaped and carried to completion by him. Among these were the Colorado Springs company; the National Land and Improvement company, the Southern Colorado Improvement Company, from which the present Colorado Fuel and Iron company has grown, and an infinite number of other enterprises.

Always an Advocate of Peace.

Although General Palmer took an active part in the Civil war in putting down the rebellion, he was always an earnest advocate of peace. His early Quaker teachings, perhaps, were formative of his dislike of war. He took strong ground against the Spanish war, believing that it might have been avoided; but he never questioned the necessity and propriety of opposing by force of arms those who arrayed themselves against the [illegible] and fought to establish a nation, the corner stone of which was slavery. During the war he destroyed only such property as could be used by the enemy for hostile purposes, and as soon as it became evident that the war was practically over, he exerted himself to prevent the destruction of private property. In Georgia, he posted guards on many plantations, and prevented the destruction of thousands of bales of cotton. Such leading Confederates as Howell Cobb and Mr. Yancy—brother of the fire-eating L. L. Yancy—successfully appealed to him for the protection of their property.

General Palmer often remarked when riding through the south that he was a very poorly read man. Nevertheless his friends were often surprised at the extent of his learning; knowledge gained by observation and thought rather than by reading. He would have made a successful manager of any large industrial establishment. He was interested in geology and frequently called attention to the rock formations of the mountains as he rode along. During the strenuous ride in northern Alabama after Hood's pontoon train, he remarked: "This must become a great iron making region." Up to that time not a pound of iron had been made there. Now it is one of the most important iron manufacturing centers of the world.

General Palmer possessed in the highest degree the dignity of manners that inspired respect and reverence. Though like all strong men he had confidence in himself, he never expressed himself dogmatically, but listened attentively to the views of others and not infrequently followed their advice.

He had nothing but contempt for the demagogue. He disdained that popularity which is purchased by the sacrifice of self-respect, yet to the credit of humanity it can be said that he left no enemies behind him, and few men have hopes of recovery been more ardently cherished. In this community among those who knew him so well and loved him the grief is keen and universal.

The Knock-out Blow

The blow which knocked out Corbett was a revelation to the prize fighters. From the earliest days of the ring the knock-out blow was aimed for the jaw, the temple or the jugular vein. Stomach punches were thrown in to worry and weary the fighter, but if a scientific man had told one of the old fighters that the most vulnerable spot was the region of the stomach, he'd have laughed at him for an ignoramus. Dr. Pierce is bringing home to the public a parallel fact; that the stomach is the most vulnerable organ out of the prize ring as well as in it. We protect our heads, throats, feet and lungs, but to the stomach A are utterly indifferent, until disease finds the solar plexus and knocks us out.

Make your stomach sound and strong by the use of Doctor Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, and you protect yourself in your most vulnerable spot. "Golden Medical Discovery" cures weak stomach, indigestion, or dyspepsia, torpid liver, bad, thin and impure blood and other disease of the organs of digestion and nutrition.

The "Golden Medical Discovery" has a specific curative effect upon all mucous surfaces and hence cures catarrh, no matter where located or what stage it may have reached. In Nasal Catarrh it is well to cleanse the passages with Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy fluid while using the "Discovery" as a constitutional remedy. If by the "Golden Medical Discovery" cures catarrhal diseases, as of the stomach, bowels, bladder and other pelvic organs will be plain to you if you will read a booklet of extracts from the writings of eminent medical authorities, endorsing its ingredients and explaining their curative properties. It is mailed free on request. Address Dr. R. V. Pierce, Buffalo, N. Y. This booklet gives all the ingredients entering into Dr. Pierce's medicines from which it will be seen that they contain not a drop of alcohol—pure, triple-refined glycerine being used instead.

It's foolish and often dangerous to experiment with new or but slightly tested medicines—sometimes urged upon the afflicted as "just as good" or better than "Golden Medical Discovery." The dishonest dealer sometimes insists that he knows what the proffered substitute is made of, but you don't and it is decidedly for your interest that you should know what you are taking into your stomach and system expecting it to act as a curative. To him its only a difference of profit. Therefore, insist on having Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. If not promptly supplied [illegible] stamps to pay cost of mailing only on a free copy of Dr. Pierce's Common Sense Medical Adviser, 1008 pages, cloth-bound. Address Dr. Pierce as above.

NEW HEALTH MACHINES

They'll Restore Injured Joints and Muscles to Normal State.

From the New York Press.

The 30 steel machines, with their complicated mechanism, which will be used in the new department of mechanicotherapy in the Vanderbilt clinic of the College of Physicians and Surgeons have been placed on public exhibition. The machines are a gift from Mrs. Ray Stutshak in memory of her husband, who was a prominent merchant. Arranged in long rows in a room of the clinic, they look like gymnastic apparatus of curious design.

Dr. Charles H. Jaeger, one of the surgeons of the hospital, explained the machines would give strength to the tissues, bones and muscles of patients convalescing from operations. The principle of the system is to exercise the joints and muscles to restore them to their normal condition.

"These machines are, so planned," Dr. Jaeger said, "that there isn't a joint or muscle in the entire body that can not be exercised by one of them. The system might be called medical gymnastics, by means of which any workman who has suffered a fracture or other injury which has disabled a joint or muscle can have the stiffened joint or muscle restored to full working capacity in the shortest possible time."

Flatulency Or Wind On Stomach

Is It Is, Or Acidity Caused That Decaying Food is Making Gas.

This most serious condition is very prevalent and results most distressingly and fatally oftentimes. The stomach in cases of flatulency is unable to digest the food properly. Decay sets in, gases form, extend the stomach walls then by downward into the bowels, and if not relieved it extends upward pressing against the lungs, liver and heart, causing shortage of breath, belching, foul odors and many times sudden death.

Foods which are filled with gases, when taken into a deranged stomach cause flatulency rapidly, vegetables being especially given to this quality. Against such a condition the stomach can do but little. Because then, foul and poisonous gases affect its glands, muscles and tissues to such a degree as to incapacitate it almost at once.

These gases distend the stomach in all directions, preventing the contracting muscles from doing their regular duties, or if they do force the gas from the stomach it goes elsewhere in the system, with even more harassing results, and then the decaying mass still remains to generate more gases.

The most effective methods for allaying flatulency is to remove the cause of gas making. An emetic will do this but the stomach will have the same trouble the moment new food enters it.

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets get at gas food at once, digest it, prevent decay, quickly reduce food to nourishment, make good rich gastric fluid and pass the digested food to the intestines, giving the stomach and the system its nourishment. Flatulency simply cannot exist where these little tablets are used. They build up the stomach fluids so that it matters not how many vegetables you eat, or food containing quantities of gas, the stomach does its work well and quickly.

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets are sold everywhere and used the whole world over by sick stomachs and stomachs that want to eat heartily and yet not get sick.

Every druggist carries Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets, price 50 cents per box. The demand for these little digesters is constantly increasing. Forty thousand physicians in America and Canada use them and prescribe them. Send us your name and address and we will send you a trial package by mail free. Address F. A. A BRILLIANT CAREER AS RAILWAY BUILDER modestly as though the feat which he had accomplished was nothing extraordinary. While contemplating the panorama of mountain and plain he soon became impressed with the marvelous possibilities and boundless resources that waited for development on the instrumentalities of capital and energy wisely directed. He had won the confidence of capitalists and demonstrated his capacity; therefore when he had perfected his scheme and matured his plans for the building of a railroad along the base of the mountains from Denver into Mexico the requisite capital was forthcoming. The Denver and Rio Grande railroad with its numerous branches in the mountains was General Palmer's conception.

Ran Far Into the Future.

It was a comprehensive scheme, by many regarded as Utopian because it contemplated the construction of hundreds of miles of railroad through a country practically uninhabited and generally considered as unsafe for habitation, because wanting in productive capacity to sustain a population. Aside from a few white settlers at Pueblo, small Mexican settlements at Trinidad, a village of pioneers at Colorado City, small bands of Cheyenne and Arapahoe Indians and scattered settlers at some other points, there were not enough inhabitants for the nucleus of a community anywhere on the proposed line.

But General Palmer's foresight penetrated further than the vision of others who looked with doubt and suspicion on the enterprise. He proposed to lay tribute on the hidden treasures of the mountains and to stimulate production of the precious metals by affording facilities for shipment and to encourage the farmer and rancher to occupy the plains for the purpose of agriculture and stock growing by affording the means of quick transportation to distant points. It was a gigantic and daring proposition, but not visionary, for the man that conceived it was able to procure the necessary capital for the undertaking. The event has proved its practicability and correctness.

No single agency has done more to stimulate mining camps and open valuable mines in Colorado than the projection and completion of this vast and complex system of mountain railroads. Associated with General Palmer in the enterprise were other men of sturdy character, public spirit and determination, including Governor A. C. Hunt, Col. W. H. Greenwood, Col. D. C. Dodge, Dr. W. A. Hall and W. S. Jackson. All of them ascribe to General Palmer the genius that conceived the colossal undertaking, the ability that planned and directed, and the resourcefulness that completed the work. He was the executive power in construction and in operation, serving as president from the organization of the company in 1870 to thirteen years.

Founded Colorado Springs.

General Palmer was also the founder of Colorado Springs and one of the factors in devising the rules adopted by the town company which established certain fundamental conditions to govern the transfer and conveyance of lots and to protect the community that should thereafter form the urban population under a municipal government. One of these conditions was that no saloon for the sale of intoxicating liquors should ever be established in the town, a condition set forth in the conveyance of every lot and whose violation works a forfeiture of the title.

General Palmer was also one of the founders of Palmer Lake, South Pueblo, Alamosa, Durango and other towns. He projected, and by the cooperation of others associated with him built the Rio Grande Western railroad from Grand Junction to Salt Lake and served as president of the company from the time of its commencement in 1881 until 1901, when he sold his interest and retired from the executive management. He was the prime factor in projecting and completing the magnificent Antlers hotel in Colorado Springs opened in July, 1901, a monument to the enterprise and sagacity of its founder.

FALL FROM HORSE RESULTED IN DEATH

dren of Colorado Springs, who sent the invalid beautiful floral tributes, representing every school in this town. The act was unimpired by any of the teachers, and came as a voluntary token of the love and esteem of the children. General Palmer was deeply moved, and expressed his appreciation in no uncertain terms.

It was finally seen that the general had permanently lost the use of the lower part of his body, and the exercise of his marvelous mentality in the direction of his affairs after the accident was little short of miraculous. General Palmer was more than 70 years old when he sustained the fall, and his mental activity after the accident was due to his remarkable vitality.

Skilled Specialists Here.

From time to time skilled specialists arrived here from the east in an attempt to aid the invalid. Dr. M. Allen Starr, one of the most eminent nerve specialists in the world, was summoned from New York and made a special diagnosis of General Palmer's injuries, assisted by the local and Denver physicians already in attendance. It was decided not to operate on the sufferer and the following bulletin was issued:

There has been a fracture of one of the cervical vertebrae with contusions of the spinal chord, and hemorrhage about the spinal chord. The injury is causing paralysis, but surgical operation or interference in any form is and has been definitely contraindicated. There has been some improvement. Such improvement as may further occur will necessarily be slow, but it is hoped that it may be progressive.

Dr. S. Weir Mitchell, another specialist of international reputation, the author of several medical books and a close friend of General Palmer, also came here from Philadelphia in a futile attempt to give relief.

Entertained His Regiment.

The large scale on which General Palmer carried through any measure he favored is shown in the elaborate and costly entertainment of the survivors of the "Fighting Fifteenth" Pennsylvania cavalry regiment, of which he was commander during the Civil war. It had been the custom for years for the survivors to gather in Philadelphia in annual reunion, but General Palmer's physicians positively forbade him carrying out his expressed desire to go to Philadelphia for the 1907 reunion. Nothing daunted, the veteran soldier promptly invited the survivors to join him in celebrating the reunion at his home. Almost without exception, the entire membership of 270 accepted the invitation, and a week's jollification was held at Glen Eyrie and in this city in August, 1907. General Palmer paid all the expenses of his guests from the time they left home until their return. This reunion, said to be the largest private affair of the kind ever held, cost between $50,000 and $75,000.

Miss Dale Palmer, the eldest daughter of the general, was married to Leopold Hamilton Myers of London, at Glen Eyrie, January 20, 1907. The young couple left shortly afterward for the groom's home, but recently visited the general and were with him when he died.

The engagement of Miss Marjorie Palmer, the youngest daughter of the general, to Captain Richard Wellesley of the British army became known during the soldiers' reunion in August, 1907, and in June, 1908, General Palmer, the prospective bride and the entire household, including a retinue of servants, left for London, where the wedding was to be celebrated. Every possible safeguard and precaution for his health and comfort was taken, and the party arrived in England after an uneventful trip. They sailed in the steamer Minneapolis, a section of which was especially fitted out for the party.

The breaking off of Miss Palmer's engagement was known shortly afterward, and the party returned to this city about the middle of November, 1908. The general's health was not so good as when he left Colorado Springs, but it was announced that he felt considerably better than during his visit abroad.

Whenever the weather permitted, General Palmer was driven around town and to the spots he loved so well in the big steamer automobile which residents of the city had come to recognize as the Palmer car, and the fact that the founder of Colorado Springs was able to be out was always a cause of general gratification.

lers Hotel company, which is assessed at $500,000, owns the Antlers hotel, worth, as stated, about $1,000,000. The Out West Printing and Stationery company, assessed at $80,000, owns property worth more than $100,000. The combined holdings of these companies thus aggregate more than $2,000,000.

Although General Palmer is known to have spent many thousands of dollars in improving his already valuable property at Wagon Wheel Gap, no accurate estimate of its worth can be given, but it is understood to be valued at between $150,000 and $175,000. Tomorrow and All the Week.--First Authentic Display of EARLY SPRING MILLINERY

DURING these early display days the Easter Millinery is the attraction that beckons almost every Colorado Springs woman to the Millinery Room. The new hats are calling forth unlimited expressions of enthusiasm, pleasure and approval. Never was the Hibbard display more attractive so early in the season.

The most striking feature of the hats this season is their wearableness; the intelligent adaptation of French styles to conservative tastes. Here at Hibbard's are close copies of the Parisian ideas made and trimmed in our own workrooms.

At $5.00 The new hats are not exorbitant in price either. At five dollars we show a wide range of distinctive styles in black and colored hats.

Descriptions would be futile. Every woman must see the showing for herself. No two hats alike; but the idea back of all seems a tendency toward greater femininity and grace. Flowers, feathers, plumes, ribbons and velvets are incorporated into the new spring hat ideas, in immense diversion of styles, including such shapes as Tam crown turbans, Leghorn picture hats, Flower crowned pokes, Spanish turbans, Mushroom turbans, Round crown mushrooms, Cossack turbans, French turbans, etc.

ALL BLACK HATS will be much in evidence and strongly favored for spring. Not mourning hats, far from it! But exquisite combinations of blacks—the airy black of sheer straw, the feathery black of aigrettes and wings, the soft black of plumes, the deep black of velvet, and the brilliant black of jet. Very dashing are these Black Hats—and the very latest note of this year's smartness.

FINE PARK SYSTEM A GIFT FROM PALMER

the beautifying and maintenance is enormous but it is almost impossible to even make an approximate estimate of the amount. General Palmer's every gift has been made with a view of test and it has always been contrary to his wishes that these generous grants should be mentioned in connection with figures and cost or estimated according to their financial value.

In connection with all General Palmer's work both in buildings and park improvements in and about Colorado Springs it must be remembered that he had always constantly in his employ hundreds of skilled and unskilled workmen at the highest wages and no consideration was the treatment habitually accorded to employes that among the thousands who have been in General Palmer's employ there was probably not one who did not sometime in his life say "General Palmer is the best employer I ever worked for." This lack of 'driving' spirit necessarily resulted in making almost every work much greater in cost to General Palmer than it would have been to the ordinary employer but the benefit went to the working men. All that General Palmer demanded was absolutely faithful and substantial work.

His Parks and Driveways

One of the most important of the General's gifts to the city is Palmer Park consisting of 753 acres. The site was acquired by General Palmer in August 1901 and the deed was made out to the city in January 1902. It was bought from the Northfield Land and Water company but the amount paid by the General has never been made public, nor have the immense sums which have been spent on the improvement of the grounds ever been estimated the principal desire of the General having been to make a beautiful park regardless of cost.

Monument Valley Park is another of his princely gifts to Colorado Springs. This park in its present state represents nothing less than a triumph of skill, money and art over Nature for this magnificent stretch of ground about two miles long and averaging 800 feet in width was formerly an unsightly creek bottom overgrown with underbrush and subject to periodical overflows from the straggling creek. It comprises about 165 acres and the difficulties encountered in making the transformation can be realized only by those who have been connected with the work.

Reclaimed From a Wilderness.

Every foot of the creek has been walled in with rock, the surface of the land has been leveled and sodded and beautiful [illegible] have taken the place of the undergrowth. Part of this site has been in the possession of General Palmer for many years, and about fifteen acres of it was obtained originally from the Willow Park Improvement association to which body it was originally deeded. Subsequently this portion was deeded to the city under the condition that it be improved within three years but no action was taken until General Palmer's plan matured and embraced the whole area.

Besides his park work the General spent vast sums in the laying out and perfection of roads, drives and boulevards in the neighborhood of this city. In the Pike's Peak region generally the most expensive and beautiful of these are the Mesa road the Paseo and Boulevard drives to Palmer park the High Line drive between North Cheyenne cañon and Bear creek, and from Bear creek to Crystal park, and the splendid roads connecting Glen Eyrie and Colorado City. Besides these there are [illegible] of fine bridle paths, drives and trails by which tourists are enabled to see the beauties of the [illegible] region and which have been designed entirely by General Palmer and built at his expense. The total mileage thus donated to the public is 8 miles, according to figures made by Mr. Reid.

"A large part of this work involving the expenditure of thousands of dollars" said Mr. Reid "has been designed by General Palmer with the primary object of giving employment to hundreds of men especially at times when other work was scarce. In the cold weather when certain classes of work could not be done advantageously the General would invariably request me to put the men at some other class of work rather than lay them off. His sympathy seemed always to be flowing out towards those in less favored circumstances than himself, and his pay roll every month for years has been enormous. The demands upon him for assistance were incessant and to my certain knowledge he never turned down a case that was in the least way deserving for if he was not satisfied in his own mind as to the need of the person in question he invariably gave the matter to me to hunt up and if the person was not an actual imposter the request was invariably granted. He never turned away from an appeal without first finding out all about the case lest in doing so he might inadvertently overlook a deserving case.

"No one will ever know the extent of the General's private pension list. He showed the same tender thoughtfulness for all creatures. I have been ordered many a time to change my survey on a trail or road rather than to destroy a bird's nest. He also showed the same care for the welfare of the horses employed on the various works. For years the General has kept in his employ dozens of old and crippled men unable to do a day's work simply because he knew they needed the money and they were kept on the roll by his express wishes."

Although General Palmer was the founder of the city of Colorado Springs he never speculated in real estate or attempted to monopolize the best sites, and his personal holdings at the present time are not comparatively large. The Antlers hotel is practically his private property, although it is controlled under the name of the Antlers Hotel company. The same may be said of The Gazette building and the Out West Printing company out these embrace nearly all his private holdings in Colorado Springs. He is a large stockholder in the Colorado Springs Company. His private taxes not including the taxes paid on the Antlers hotel and the Out West building amount yearly to $15,000.

Monument Valley Park.

The work on Monument Valley park was in charge of Engineer E. C. van Diest, and the laying out of the flower beds and plants was done by F. W. Dawson and C. W. Leavitt. The park has a complete water system supplied from a reservoir which in turn is supplied from the city ditch the park getting one cubic foot per second of the night flow. There is one main pipe line beginning with a diameter of 12 inches and reducing gradually to three inches at the south end. The main is 10,500 feet long and there are 20,000 feet of laterals with hydrant connections every 1,0 feet.

The General's idea was to have a beautiful frontage extending through the city along the railway so as to adorn the entrance to the city and form a series of shaded walks free from dust and perfectly safe for women and children which is one reason why no boulevard has been built or contemplated through the park. Four little lakes have been constructed and the keeper's cottage and storehouse is situated at the north end. There is a large greenhouse which last season supplied upwards of 50,000 plants which were set out through the park. These are mainly perennials.

Adapted From Nature

Another central idea in constructing the park was to take advantage as much as possible of existing conditions in the way of natural formation and the growth of trees and shrubs. These have been supplemented with plants of a similar variety so as to reduce the cost of the park's maintenance as they are known to grow successfully on native soil. The large grassy areas were planted not so much with lawn grass as with field grasses which after having been well established will be allowed to reach nearly their full height so as to [illegible] cutting but once a year. A tract of one and a half acres between Boulevard street and Bijou street has been devoted to the planting exclusively of Colorado wild flowers and flowering shrubs arranged in such a way as to blossom in rotation in the several beds so that a portion of each bed will be in bloom the entire season.

Adjoining this is the part formerly known as Willow Park which on account of its sheltered location was considered suitable for planting trees and shrubs of imported varieties [illegible] others grown at lower altitudes, but not indigenous to Colorado [illegible] make [illegible]

CONCISE HISTORY OF PALMER'S LIFE

War Hero and Empire Builder Who Was a Born Leader of Men.

Active Life Spanning Years With Service in Army, Rare Drift of Civil War Brought Opportunities for Advancement

William J. Palmer of Colorado Springs, son of John and Matilda (Jackson) Palmer was born near Leipsic, Kent county, Delaware, September 17, 1836, his descent being English, German and Irish. He was educated at a Friends' school at the Central High school and at the Zane Street Grammar school in Philadelphia. In 1853 at the age of 17, he entered the engineer corps of the Hempfield railroad in Washington county, Pennsylvania under the well-known civil engineer, Charles Ellet, later the organizer of the Ram fleet on the Mississippi river early in the civil war.

In 1855 he went to England where he devoted a year of travel to the practical study of civil and mining engineering. Returning home he became for a year secretary and treasurer of the Westmoreland coal company of Pennsylvania and then private secretary to John Edgar Thompson president of the Pennsylvania Railroad company. In the latter position Palmer continued four years until the outbreak of the Civil war.

After the battle of Bull Run in July 1861, young Palmer recruited in the state of Pennsylvania organized, and was made captain of, the Anderson troop of cavalry for escort and special duty with General Robert Anderson when that hero of Fort Sumter took command in Kentucky. General Anderson retiring, General W. T. Sherman accepted the troop from Captain Palmer but just before it reached the field General Buell had taken command in Kentucky, and Captain Palmer and his troop served under him about a year which service included the first Nashville and Shiloh campaigns.

In the summer of 1862 Captain Palmer received from Governor Curtin of Pennsylvania at the request of General Rosecrans authority to raise a regiment of cavalry, other regiments Pennsylvania, but before its quota had been filled the incompleted organization was sent into the Cumberland valley of Maryland to meet the Confederate invasion of Maryland that was defeated and turned back at Antietam in September 1862. On the day after that battle, Captain Palmer volunteered to General McClellan for special duty within the enemy's lines where he was taken prisoner, and was so held until January, 1863, when he was released and returned to active service.

Promoted to Colonelcy

In the meantime Captain Palmer had been promoted to be colonel of his regiment which upon the retirement of General Buell had become a part of the Army of the Cumberland [illegible] then serving under General Rosecrans in Tennessee. Taking command of it Colonel Palmer soon brought it to a high state of efficiency and with it was engaged in the Chickamauga campaign in the battle of Missionary Ridge and in the operations against General Longstreet in the valley of the French Broad river, in the winter of 1863-4. In the Atlanta campaign he had charge of a part of the line of communication and supply, and when General Hood moved to Nashville, Colonel Palmer, starting north from the foot of Lookout mountain, harassed his rear burned his headquarters pontoon train, destroyed a supply train near Aberdeen, Mississippi and subsequently routed a Confederate cavalry force under General Russell and another under General Lyon.

Made Brigadier General

For his brilliant services Colonel Palmer was brevetted brigadier general and early in the spring of 1865 was set with his brigade across the Great Smoky ranges into North Carolina and when General Johnston surrendered was placed at the head of a division and put on the track of Jefferson Davis and the Confederate forces who were then trying to escape to by gulf or to Texas. General Palmer pushed the pursuit of the Confederate president and the cavalry command with [illegible] escorting him and was close upon him when he was captured by General Wilson.

The disbandment of the [illegible] army followed soon and General Palmer returned to the work of civil life after an experience unusually active military [illegible] for so young a man. Of him Gen. [illegible] has said:

"The best officer in the service, volunteer or regular, who has proved the duties which have devolved upon him with more intelligence, zeal, energy than General Palmer was seldom if ever does distinguished success through the war places his reputation beyond controversy."

As a Railroad Builder

Immediately after being mustered out of service in the summer of 1865 General Palmer at the request of John Edgar Thompson, Thomas A. Scott and other Pennsylvania railroad friends was elected secretary and treasurer of the Kansas Pacific Railroad company whose road was then the Union Pacific Eastern division. It was his connection with that road that first brought him into Colorado and resulted in his long and conspicuously successful identification with the development of the resources of this state until his death.

The history of General Palmer's connection with the building of the Kansas Pacific railroad to Denver in 1869 and with the completion of the Denver Pacific road between Denver and Cheyenne in the same year, his conception of the great system of the Denver & Rio Grande railroad and his construction of it and its several allied and connecting enterprises forms a separate article. One of the more important industrial enterprises which was projected and instituted by him in 1872, was the Central Colorado Manufacturing company which later became the Colorado Coal and Iron company and is now the Colorado Fuel and Iron company.

General Palmer remained president of the D. & R. G. system and its directing personality until August 1883 when he resigned to give greater attention to his railroad enterprise in Mexico (N. Mexican National railroad but he continued to be president of the Rio Grande Western road extending from Grand Junction Colo. to Salt Lake City and Ogden, Utah until April 1901, when he withdrew from personal participation in its affairs and from an active railroad career, which with the exception of his four years of service in the Union armies during the Civil war had extended over a period of 47 years. His retirement was marked by an unusually noteworthy act. As a railway stockholder in association with [illegible] leaders of New York and other employes of the Rio Grande Western railroad $1,000,000 in the company stock in recognition of their fidelity throughout a long service with the company. The stock which constituted this gift was provided by General Palmer and other stockholders in the Rio Grande Western.

Founded Colorado Springs

In connection with his inception and construction of the D. & R. G. railroad General Palmer conceived and founded upon a [illegible] site near the western base of [illegible] Peak the city of Colorado Springs near which at the foot of the Rocky Mountains he lived since which city ran into existence in the [illegible] At that time he [illegible] which [illegible] land upon which the city was laid out the first sale of its site being dated July 31 of [illegible] H. Wilson identified with the founding of South Pueblo Manitou Durango and several lesser communities on the line of the D. & R. G.

[illegible] of Palmer's home city was [illegible] object of his especial regard [illegible] contributed in many ways to [illegible] prosperity and advancement. One [illegible] proof of his great interest [illegible] for was his gift of it in 1901 of [illegible] of 69 acres of land for a public park now known as Palmer park upon which he made generous expenditures in preparing it for park [illegible]

On November 27, 1870, General Palmer married Miss Queen Mellon of Philadelphia, Pa. and to them were born three daughters, the Misses Marjorie and Dorothy Palmer. Mrs. Palmer died in January 1894.

NEWBRO'S HERPICIDE

Is the original remedy that "kills the dandruff germ"

Edna D. Allen

WITHOUT dandruff the hair must grow luxuriantly, except in chronic baldness, which is incurable. Dandruff is a contagious disease caused by a germ or microbe. To eradicate dandruff, this germ—a tiny vegetable growth—must be destroyed and kept out of the scalp with Newbro's Herpicide.

A WOMAN TO BE PRETTY

A woman to be pretty must have pretty hair. Beautiful locks have a subtle charm for the poet says "Hair tresses man's imperial race ensnare." The unpoetic and intensely real dandruff microbe makes the hair dull, brittle and lusterless with later dandruff, itching scalp and falling hair. Newbro's Herpicide destroys this enemy of beauty and enables the hair to resume its natural luster and abundance. Almost marvelous results sometimes follow the continued use of Herpicide. Overcomes excessive oiliness and makes the hair light and fluffy. It contains no grease or dye. Stops itching of the scalp almost instantly.

Discriminating ladies who have used Newbro's Herpicide, speak of it in the highest terms, for its almost magical effect upon the scalp, and also for its excellence as a regular hair dressing. It is delightfully fragrant and refreshing.

"I have found Newbro's Herpicide excellent for the hair. The first application stops itching of the scalp and it leaves the hair soft and silky."

(Signed) EDNA D. ALLEN,
Syracuse, N. Y.

FRUIT GROWERS EXPECT TO HAVE HEAVY CROPS

Strawberries which usually appear on the market early in March, have been set back by unseasonable weather in Texas and California, and such as are to be had come from Old Mexico and are selling at 35 cents a pint The present demand is mostly from hotels and restaurants The dealers expect berries to come in from the southern states within a month, but prices will not be much cheaper until early summer when the home grown berries appear

Indications point to the heaviest fruit crop this season that Colorado has had in many years Winter weather in its season practically eliminated danger of late frosts The trees are much stronger for the rest they have had during the last two seasons and will doubtless give a record-breaking yield this year.

His family has left Ramah and has gone to St Louis, their former home

THE MISSES ESTILL HELP TO IDENTIFY BOLD BURGLARS

The Misses Flora and Nell Estill of Colorado Springs have written to their father, Dr T J Estill of a thrilling experience they had with two "gentlemen" burglars in the east The young women are attending a fashionable school in Brookline, a suburb of Boston. Two stylishly-dressed young men supplied with references, applied for rooms where the Misses Estill are staying They were given apartments and while the other guests were at luncheon ransacked the house and disappeared with valuables worth several thousands of dollars The plunder was pawned at Boston, and later the thieves mailed the pawn tickets to the landlady of the house in a courteous letter, asking pardon for the annoyance they had caused. The burglars were arrested in New York for another robbery, and the Misses Estill, with other guests from their house, identified them as the men who had taken the valuables.

HOME INDUSTRIES TO QUALIFY TOMORROW

WILL THEN TAKE OVER THE STRATTON ESTATE.

Dines Scheduled to Arrive Here Today—Institution Will Be Built Soon

Thomas Dines of Denver will be in Colorado Springs today and together with William Lennox and Rice Quaintance for the long they will ask the county court to turn over to them the bulk of the Stratton estate amounting to about $6,000,000.

It is understood that a site will be selected within the next few weeks and that work will progress with some during the spring of summer.

The delay on the part of the executors in qualifying has been unavoidable. When Mr Dines was in Denver Mr Lennox was out of the city and when Mr Lennox returned Mr Dines was out of the state. It is necessary for the three executors to qualify in Colorado Springs at the same time.

A clause is inserted by the City Council compelling it to carry in all carriers in uniform, between the hours of 6 a m and 8 p m free of charge. The statement was made by Attorney D P Strickler of the Street Railway company at an adjourned meeting of the City Council last night. Mr Strickler contends that the Street Railway company is under no obligation to the United States government. He said that the company is ready and willing at any time to enter into a contract with the postal department to transport its mail and carriers.

The Letter Carriers association local No. 204 presented a number of letters from the banks and leading merchants of the city asking that the clause be inserted in the franchise.

The agreement reached between the Santa Fe road and the Street Railway company regarding the Pikes Peak avenue undercrossing was the subject of comment by numerous residents of East Huerfano street. Property holders east of the Santa Fe tracks object to the closing of Huerfano street unless an undercrossing is provided.

GIDDINGS BROS. HAVE OPENING TOMORROW.

The annual spring opening and display of Giddings Bros. will be held on Monday the 15th. The store will be especially decorated for the occasion and a great deal of extra expense has been gone to to make this opening the most attractive ever held by the Giddings store. Every one is cordially invited to attend.

DEATH—Stricken with pneumonia last Wednesday Miss Maude Brown, aged 25 years, died yesterday morning at 11 o'clock at 302 Jackson street, Colorado City. She had been in feeble health for some time and was brought here a week ago from Chanute, Kan., by her parents, Mr and Mrs W M Brown. The body was taken to Chanute, Kan., last night by the parents.

PORTLAND Ore., March 13—While standing too close to a cage of tigers at the winter quarters of a circus today Mrs Vernon who appeared at a local theater in an act with her husband, a ventriloquist, was clawed by one of the big cats and the woman is now at the Good Samaritan hospital. Her face is terribly lacerated from the claws of the Royal Bengal tiger.

INTERURBAN AND SANTA FE REACH AGREEMENT

Decide on Pikes Peak Undercrossing. Street Railway Refuses Mail Carriers Free Transportation.

An agreement which it is expected will settle a long-standing controversy between the Santa Fe Railway company and the Colorado Springs and Interurban Railway company has been arrived at between the attorneys for the companies, in regard to the street car crossing on East Pikes Peak avenue. By the agreement the Santa Fe will construct an undercrossing 80 feet wide beneath its tracks in return for an abandonment of its grade crossing rights by the street car company. The Santa Fe will also grade El Paso street, between Huerfano and Bijou, and construct the necessary conduits to make the street fit for travel. The company will also give the street railway corporation the right of way across its grounds at the Santa Fe depot so that a loop can be built from Huerfano to Pikes Peak avenue when the Council has granted the necessary franchise on East Huerfano street.

The street car company will refuse to accept the franchise asked for if

COLLEGE FOOTBALL ENERGY.

Goldwin Smith Says Force Spent Cannot Be Recalled for Study.

Ithaca Dispatch to the New York Times.

Energy spent in football cannot be recalled, writes Goldwin Smith to the Cornell Era commenting on the true relation of athletes to student life. He says:

"I see that the number of athletes failing to pass a university examination is less than it was. The shade of Ezra Cornell will rejoice. What our founder wanted was not show of muscle, but preparation for life, in which, in the case of university men, muscle does not count for much. The force spent in football cannot be recalled for study. Let us have games, by all means, but games which exercise, not exhaust, and in which all alike can take part.

"Besides, there is military drill, good in itself and not to be neglected if the types of the country is to be kept in the right hands. Into some universities the betting ring seems to have crept, never, I hope, into ours."

GENERAL PALMER.

IN his "Table Talk" Hewitt remarks that "No really great man ever thought himself so," which is merely another way of saying that modesty and true greatness are inseparable. Greatness is a much abused word and the thing itself is almost indefinable. There are shades of meaning of the term which do not apply to General Palmer at all and there are others that describe him perfectly. Modesty was the most conspicuous trait of his character; there was no pose, no attitudinizing in the limelight. It was with extreme reluctance that he talked of his achievements, and he was altogether too prone to minimize his achievements and depreciate the conspicuous part he had played both in war and peace.

Perhaps if it were not for this excessive dislike of publicity, the constant shrinking from the public gaze which is always centered on a man of his position, General Palmer would have been more a national figure, but even as it was he could not completely efface himself. This was shown, especially in recent years, by the attention devoted to him by the press throughout the country. The inevitable accident in the fall of 1906, which was the remote cause of his death, the extraordinary reunion of his Civil War comrades in this city the following summer, and more recently his trip to England were made the text of general comment on his life and notable career, and it is certain that the news of his passing will inspire even more widespread expressions of regret.

INTEREST IN COLORADO SPRINGS.

The relation between General Palmer and the people of Colorado Springs was a peculiar one, and it is a curious fact that most of them came to know him better during the period of invalidism following his injury than they had known him throughout the third of a century of health and strength during which he nursed the infant village to its present splendid status.

The reason for this may be better understood after one has read the brief contribution in today's issue by John Potter, one of General Palmer's associates in the founding of the town, explaining the general's attitude toward the public life. He particularly desired to avoid even the appearance of seeking to dominate its affairs, and therefore held himself aloof in marked degree from active participation. He had founded the town and retained an active interest in its welfare, but he wanted the people, its real owners, to run it for themselves, of course adhering to the vital principles upon which it was established.

This was General Palmer's position to the end of his life, but nobody ever thought for a moment of regarding it as an indication that he had lost interest in the place. On the contrary, there has been scarcely a year in which he has not shown his interest in Colorado Springs in the most substantial fashion. As he prospered he shared his prosperity with the city of his creation. Particularly within the last ten years these evidences of his generosity and regard have been numerous. Soon after the town was established he set aside a tract of land as the site of a future college, and when the time was ripe he made the beginnings of that institution which has since grown to be one of the most notable institutions of higher education in the West.

DEVOTED TO THE PUBLIC.

General Palmer did not merely found Colorado College; he kept it alive through the trying period in which it must have perished but for his continuing efforts. He gave liberally of his own means and raised other funds among his friends in the East, and we may safely say that but for him it would not exist. This was the first and one of the greatest of his benefactions to Colorado Springs.

He gave to the city parks and [illegible] drives, by the judicious expenditure of his means transforming unsightly waste places into spots of surpassing beauty. He knew just what to do and how to do it to accomplish the desired end, and though he achieved wonders in making accessible to the people the many beauties of nature to be found in this region, it is wholly of character that he did it with consummate skill and an exquisite sense of propriety, for in no case has Nature been spoiled by mistaken attempts to improve upon her handiwork.

In countless ways he sought the advancement of Colorado Springs in accordance with its truest welfare and no really worthy movement ever failed to receive his support. Recognizing that the principal railroad approach to the city was barren and unsightly, as is true in all cities, he bought the land, and transformed it into a beautiful park which he presented to the people. When Andrew Carnegie made a donation for a public library it was General Palmer who donated a valuable piece of ground as a site in order that the original gift might be used entire for the construction of the building. He built a splendid hotel which for many years must have been conducted at a loss, in order that visitors might be assured of having such a hotel as should attract the best class of tourist patronage. True, it was a business venture, but at the same time it was nothing more than a benefaction to the city. Wherever he saw an opportunity to make an improvement of any kind which would be of real value to the people he did not hesitate to do it, even at great cost, provided he recognized its real worth.

NOTABLE BUSINESS ACTIVITIES.

It would be impossible within the limits of this article to recount the part played by General Palmer in the development of Colorado. He came here soon after the war which this state was still engaged in, in charge of the construction of the Kansas Pacific railroad, now a part of the Union Pacific system. With a grasp of the possibilities of this region that amounted almost to divination he saw that this was to be a populous and prosperous state at a time not far distant. The population of Colorado then was only a few thousands, and the resources and industries which have since made it famous were mostly undeveloped or did not exist.

The scheme of a railroad penetrating the mountain fastnesses, opening up canons and then, the easy stations gradient only by Indians and wild animals, impressed most of General Palmer's contemporaries as decidedly fantastic, but that was only because they lacked his foresight and acumen. He went ahead and raised the money and built his railroad, starting from the unpromising little village of Denver and ending nowhere in particular, and he lived to see it become one of the great transportation systems of the West, the Denver and Rio Grande railway. He extended it westward and to the south, and then he built a great railway in the Republic of Mexico. He founded the Colorado Fuel and Iron Company, now by far the largest steel plant west of the Mississippi, and in the value of its output and the number of its employes the most important industry of this state.

A MANY SIDED MAN.

Amid all of these activities such as would entirely consume the energies of the average business man of equal ability, General Palmer found abundant time for the pursuit of the outdoor life to which he was devoted and the cultivation of his tastes for literature and art. He built a splendid home and filled it with the best books and pictures, of which he was keenly appreciative. After his retirement from active business his abundant energies found an outlet in those pursuits and in works of philanthropy of which the public heard almost nothing. It is striking evidence of General Palmer's abhorrence of ostentation and display that even in Colorado Springs, where he was best known, there probably is nobody who is familiar with the full list of his benefactions, and to the general public he is a sealed book. He was a rich man for many years, but when his estate is settled it is likely to be found that he died much poorer than he was a few years ago. For a long time his benefactions have consumed his entire income and made considerable inroads into the principal, for it must be remembered that while he gave liberally here at home he also gave with open-handed generosity to causes that enlisted his sympathy elsewhere.

General Palmer had passed his allotted three-score years and ten and in the natural order of events his life could not reasonably have been expected to be prolonged many years. But such a man can ill be spared, and his passing, even at an advanced age, is an irreparable loss. He exerted a wonderful influence throughout his long life, and now that he has gone he will be sincerely mourned not only by the city he founded and the state he helped to build, but in the many places throughout the nation where he was known and appreciated at his true worth.

UNDER NEW MANAGEMENT.

From the New York Evening Post.

Yet the conservative cry out as he will against our giving up the good old austerity with its clean beds, clean linen and clean food for the glittering attractions of the latest five million dollar hotel. We needs must love the newest, when we see it. The order of our present life is that landlords, cooks and chambermaids shall all the time be making place for other landlords, cooks and chambermaids. Our hotels are under new management, our politics and business affairs are under new management at least they are not under the old management. Our morals are no longer under the management of teachers and philosophers, but of yellow covers; our religions are no longer under the management of prophets and priests, but of neurotic women, trained advertisers, and soft business corporations. And the poor wayfarer, worn out by the continuous din and bustle of this world, is fast losing even the consolation he once had, of looking forward to an unbroken succession of pleasant days and dreamless nights under a new management.

BIGELOWISM AMONG ENGINEERS.

From the New York Globe.

Henry G. Granger, an American engineer resident at Cartagena, Colombia, but whose actual experience in building canals is not stated, sought to alarm the convention of mining engineers in session in New Haven yesterday concerning Panama. "Earthquakes," said Mr. Granger. The locks of the canal that is being built he is sure will topple over. Also in imagination he beheld foreign engineers flying over the canal in aeroplanes and dropping bombs containing so much explosive as to destroy the Gatun dam.

In a letter replying to other reflections on the part of Mr. Granger, Col. Goethals, who has the advantage over his critic of having more knowledge of the [illegible] as the fact that to have a sea level canal it is first necessary to dam or divert the Chagres river. The sea level project involves a dam at Gamboa nearly a mile long and more liable to earthquake disturbance than the Gatun dam and a bigger mark for aerial assault. Col. Goethals is persuaded that whatever project is adopted lock or sea level chances must be taken, and that the risk is as great with the one as the other.

MOVING PLATFORMS FOR NEW YORK.

From the Boston Transcript.

New York's never-settled problem of adequate transportation facilities for its population is threatening men of large business vision along the line of exploitation of new and radical methods. The scheme for the establishment of a system of moving platforms in the congested part of the city which has been submitted to the Public Service Commission may seem visionary, but it has behind it men with capital enough to make a thorough test of any enterprise with which they may identify themselves among them being Stuyvesant Fish and Cornelius Vanderbilt.

The plan is a comprehensive one. Its projectors evidently have so much faith in the feasibility that they approach it in no tentative manner. They request the Commission to invite bids for eight separate and distinct moving platform routes. The [illegible] one in which [illegible] lines particularly interested [illegible] the top of each car improved [illegible] space [illegible] floor [illegible] passengers [illegible] along the line of the three-track [illegible] under Broadway from Fourteenth street to Forty-second. These moving platforms would connect with the present subway stations at the former point and have a subway arcade with promenades and entrances to the basements of the stores along the street. There is no other proposition now pending for the use of this space under Broadway, and the proposed new device is receiving considerable favor and popular favor.

Four of the other routes are planned to start in the Brooklyn side of the East river and carry passengers across one of the connecting bridges into the heart of Manhattan.

INADEQUATE PUNISHMENTS.

From the Kansas City Journal.

In the past few days there have been two conspicuous instances in the Jackson county criminal court of grossly inadequate punishment, and in both cases they were the verdicts of juries and not the judgments of the court. Jack Gallagher, who committed one of the most wantonly brutal assaults of years, was fined $100, and Thomas Norris, who ran amuck in an automobile and killed a little girl during a wild ride down a boulevard, was fined $500.

For offenses of this sort any fine, no matter how large, is not a penalty in keeping with the crime. The law allows it, but in most cases it provides an alternative of imprisonment. A term in jail or the penitentiary is the only fitting punishment for men who slaughter or take human life under the circumstances proved in the Gallagher and Norris cases. A fine is out of proportion to the offense, for one defendant may easily pay it while another may not be able to do so. This discriminates between two defendants who are of the same plane of criminality, legally and morally. A term of imprisonment reduces both to the same level.

There is something inherently repugnant about the idea that money can settle any such account with society, for it is only another form of buying immunity from the consequences of one's acts. The system is a survival of the crude injustice of days long since outgrown, when even human life could be taken on the payment of a fine. Another phase of the operation of the system is virtual imprisonment for debt. From every point of view the acceptance of money with possible or attempted murder is repugnant to the spirit of the times.

I've gathered roses and the like, in many glad and golden Junes; but now, as down the world I hike, my weary hands are filled with prunes.

GATHERING ROSES.

I've gathered roses o'er and o'er, and some were white, and some were red; but when I took them to the store, the grocer wanted eggs instead. I gathered roses long ago, in other days, in other scenes, and people said "You ought to go and dig the weeds out of your beans." A million roses bloomed and died, a million more will die today; that man is wise who lets them slide, and gathers up the bales of hay.

TODAY'S HOROSCOPE

Sunday, March 14, 1909.

Beware of sudden heats imposed by Mars. A kindly sign is cast by the sister stars.

On this 73rd day of the year the Moon is in the third quarter and in greatest libration and ruled by earthly and moveable Capricorn. Venus is in sextile with Mars.

Mercury is in sextile with the Moon and in benefic aspect. The Sun is in square.

The planets govern the relations of men and women with an influence so potent that there is danger of sudden quarrel and hot dispute, even over trifling occasions.

Except for this, the sign is unusually happy for all dealings between the sexes and especially so in matters of the heart.

At 9:15 a. m. the hour should be good for barley, scabious-wort, quince, flaxseed, comfrey and Solomon's seal, all plants indicated by the old lore of herbs being under Saturn.

Timid lovers should gather their determination today and seek for answer. The 24 hours are indicated as brilliantly fortunate for courtships, engagements, weddings, wedding journeys and dramatic celebrations.

Write important letters this day. Make short journeys.

Surgeons and physicians should be fortunate in alleviating ills especially those of women.

Ask favors. Deal with superiors. Approach magistrates and other persons in power or authority.

Women with this birthdate will do well to obey their intuition that impels them to flee from coarseness or commonness. Those in employment will have an unusual opportunity during the twelvemonth.

Prosperity appears indicated for men with this birthdate. They must avoid double-dealing.

The aspect over children born this day is for dissipation of energy. They will have abundant force but will be inclined to spend it by attempts in too many directions. Girls may prove too talkative. Boys must learn to concentrate and to finish each task before another is begun.

GRAND-TOWNS

C-L-O-T-H-E-S

From the Philadelphia Public Ledger.

TO DRESS well is a fine art, and any one who dresses well is entitled to be called an artist. Unfortunately the term "well-dressed" has come to mean, sometimes, arrayed according to the latest cry in fashions, or else attired in garments of prohibitive costliness. It ought to imply the possession and exercise of good taste on the part of the wearer of the garments. It should mean that the costume is becoming, without regard to whether it is of the very latest mode and pattern, and without reference to its costliness. A man clad in plain, homespun material may be well dressed; a woman attired in silks and laces may be very badly dressed. No one can be well dressed who violates the canons of good taste, and if the costume does not fit the occasion and the circumstances, it does not matter how well it fits the wearer.

The best dressed people do not know the meaning of best clothes. They have certain articles of dress that are more expensive and elaborate than others, which they wear occasionally merely because they are only suitable upon occasion. But the real meaning of best clothes is, the clothes that are best for the purpose in hand. If one is digging in a meadow, blue jeans are the best clothes; if he is leading a cotillion, "evening dress" constitutes the best clothes; each sort of apparel is appropriate to its own occasion and inappropriate under other circumstances.

If one thinks first of the clothes and then of the wearer, the clothes are a failure, for they should express and not suppress the wearer's individuality. They should not be worn merely for their own sake, merely to display an individual taste in patterns and materials. The secret of being well dressed is to let the apparel proclaim the man, and not speak merely for itself.

Whistler once painted the portrait of a fine lady and omitted entirely the head and hands. She indignantly remonstrated, but he explained with suavity that the clothes were all he saw, and that he was accustomed to paint just what he saw and nothing more. If every artist were equally honest with himself and with his sitter, what would most life-size portraits of fashionable folk amount to? "Only clothes, and nothing more."

To demand to be admired on account of gorgeous and garish clothing is tantamount to a confession that one is hopeless of attracting attention by means of one's intellectual or spiritual qualities. But purple and fine linen are indeed a sorry substitute for the mind and soul that in a great nature shine through the bodily envelope. What are clothes as compared with personality or character?

Yet it is a great mistake to deprecate the custom of paying careful attention to one's attire, on the ground that spiritual considerations are infinitely the more important. Many people are shabby and slovenly not because they lack the means to dress better, but because they like to pretend that their minds are set on higher things. They lead upon those who are finicky about their shoes or their clothes or their coiffure as wasting time which ought to be spent on the things of the spirit. But there is no reason why the philosopher should not comb his hair and put on a clean collar.

The so-called "artistic temperament" is particularly likely to offend in this matter of the disregard of dress. The word "Bohemian" has come to be almost synonymous with the evidence of negligence and disorder in one's attire. To be sure, the poet Herrick has glorified a certain "disorder in the dress" which pleased him better than [illegible] and frigid artificiality, but his lines were not written in praise of slovens and slovenliness. He would have been vexed as much as any one by the artist who goes around looking like a last year's bird's nest as much as anything, the musician of unpruned locks crying out for careful horticulture, the poet or litterateur who eschews clean linen and a crease in his trousers.

One reason why many of the spiritually minded folk affect to pay no heed to sartorial considerations is that there are so many worldlings who can think of little else. The unworldly so much of Fitz-Brummel and Beau Nash abroad in the land with brains like the fop's brains that Addison analyzed that in sheer disgust they take refuge in the opposite extreme. But it is a blunder. It places the walking fashion-plate or animated tailor's dummy and the person who in scornful defiance and disdain of such dandiacal raiment considers not the lilies of the field, but emulates the scarecrow of the field, those were wise if well-worn lines of the poet Pope:

In words as fashions the same rule will hold
Alike fantastic if too new or old.
Be not the first by whom the new is tried
Nor yet the last to lay the old aside.

But if the counsel be well worn, so will one's clothing be if one acts upon the advice.

Some people sleep with one eye open for fear they will not be awake to the latest cry of fashion—just as a nurse sleeps within earshot of an infant. These modern Athenians are perpetually in search of some new thing, and like the baby in the soap advertisement they won't be happy till they get it. No vagary is too outlandish and eccentric for them to adopt. If only it is new, and as soon as a new mode is generally accepted they discard it in favor of the next whim of what the father of English poetry called "newfangleness." Poor souls, the loudness of their costume is their only assurance of ever making any sort of noise in the world, and they are not to be blamed perhaps if they know no better than to choose these patterns that proclaim their coming afar off, these symphonies of riotous colors that advertise them as the calliope announces the circus. After all, if everybody wore the same kind of clothes, the passing show would not be half as interesting.

MUFFLERS NEEDED.

The silent rifle now we have,
By Maxim 'twas invented;
The barrel mouth he muffles and
All noise is thus prevented.
But Maxim, in your work of peace,
Build one more thing, and that's
A muffled, silent phonograph
For use in city flats.

That done, improve your leisure hours
A longfelt want to fill.
Invent a muffler for trombones,
Those awful blasts to still;
So that the amateur may blow
And practice, as he should,
Without disturbing every one
Within his neighborhood.

Then, if you can go further still
To prove you're a magician,
Invent a muffler that will stop
The yawping politician;
If, from such sounds as this you can
A weary world release
The Nobel prize should come to you
As one who toiled for peace.

REFLECTIONS OF A BACHELOR.

From the New York Press.

The awful thing to a girl about flirting is when there's nobody to do it with.

Even if a man was on his way to heaven he'd like to stop in the road to watch a scrub game of baseball.

The only time a man can think up a good excuse for doing something foolish is when he hasn't done it.

A queer thing about a woman is how she will put on her engagement ring to go and read her old love letters.

The thing that makes a mother sure the baby is going to be a great man is how he didn't howl any louder when he was baptized.

WHALE KILLED BY SHARKS

Terrible Duel to the Death Between Denizens of the Sea Lasted Two Hours.

From the Wide World Magazine.

Early on the morning of August 14 last, while engaged in building new quarters for the lighthouse keeper at Breaksea Island, near Rottnest, Western Australia, the contractor got his men out of a hull whale, with a new-born calf, passing the island some distance off. They watched them with interest for awhile, noting the immense size of the two parents and the methodical regularity with which columns of water rose from the blow holes and then resumed their inbors.

An hour or so later—about 9 o'clock, to be exact—the men were startled by an extraordinary noise, apparently coming from the eastern end of the island, a noise unlike anything they had ever heard before. Dropping their tools and staring towards the east, they beheld such a sight as it falls to the lot of few people to witness. There, not 500 yards from the shore, was being waged a battle to the death—a fight between the great cow whale previously seen and a school of thresher sharks. The calf was swimming about distractedly—but the old bull had disappeared, having basely deserted his family at the first approach of danger.

The sharks, as though acting in accordance with some preconcerted plan, had completely surrounded the two whales, and apparently realizing that nothing was to be feared from the calf, concentrated all their efforts upon the cow. Again and again they charged in upon her, their jaws snapping, tearing at her eighty sides until the sea was red with blood. Meanwhile the cow lashed her tail furiously, hurling up sheets of reddened water and occasionally crashing down with terrific force upon one of her voracious opponents. Maddened with pain and rage, she dashed this way and that, but the sharks hung to her side with a persistency and ferocity that made the fascinated onlooker shudder. Now and again the wildly lashing tail would catch one of the assailants, driving it beneath the waves—no doubt—killed or disabled—but the remainder rushed in undismayed, tearing viciously at the mammal's bleeding flanks or butting her with the force of battering rams.

Presently the spellbound spectators realized two facts—firstly, that the calf had disappeared in the melee, and secondly, that the tortured whale was undoubtedly becoming weaker. It was obvious that the struggle [illegible] have only one ending. Still, however, she fought on doggedly, winning admiration and sympathy by her exhibition of hopeless courage.

Altering her tactics, by a supreme effort she hurled her whole great bulk clear of the water for a moment, and the fascinated onlookers beheld the sharks hanging from various parts of her gleaming body by their serrated teeth. Then down she went again, with a crash like thunder, and for an instant whale and sharks were buried amidst masses of foam, heavily colored with the poor mammal's life blood. Rising again, she essayed another chance of plan, making for the rocks and desperately striving to rub off the clinging sharks against their edges. But the threshers were equal to the occasion, while those on the outside maintained their grip, the others dived under their enemy and charged her anew, tearing at the whale's side in an ecstasy of ferocity that was blood-curdling to witness.

More and more feeble grew the whale's struggles, and at last—to the heartfelt relief of the spectators, for her death fight had been terrible to behold—the great body turned over and sank beneath the red tinted water. The unequal battle was over, having lasted from 9 o'clock until noon—an awe-inspiring a contest as man was ever privileged to witness. It is a thousand pities that there was no camera on the island to make a pictorial record of the struggle. The men went back to their work greatly impressed by the unique spectacle, and expressions of sympathy for the whale were heard on every side.

Forty-eight hours afterward the whale's carcass, which had in the meantime become distended with gas, rose to the surface and exploded like a miniature powder magazine, causing the startled people to flock to the shore to discover what had happened. On examination of the remains it was discovered that every shred of the outer flesh of the whale had been torn off by the sharks, who had now, doubtless, gone off to repeat their tactis upon some other hapless leviathan.

SANITARY DRINKING FOUNTAIN

From Popular Mechanics.

Health authorities throughout the country are heralding with a great deal of enthusiasm the advent of a new sanitary drinking fountain, and are looking forward to the time when this new health dispensing machine will be installed in all of our public schools, waiting rooms, factories, theaters, etc.

A public spirited man in Boston has invented a very unique, simple and practical piece of mechanism in the shape of a sanitary drinking fountain. It is the only apparatus that delivers water and containers from separate receptacles by one and the same process, and the interest which this invention is arousing is helping considerably in the national crusade against the spread of contagious disease through the medium of the public drinking cup.

This fountain delivers for the sum of one penny a new, clean paper cup filled with pure water. The cup is made of water-proofed paper or fiber, and cannot be returned to the machine, thus allowing to every purchaser an absolutely clean cup.

The method of operating this sanitary water vender is very simple. The cup and water are delivered at one operation. The purchaser deposits one penny in the slot provided therefor, throws the lever to the right as far as it will go, and continues holding it until the paper cup drops into view and is automatically filled with water.

The fountain has a very neat, clean and sanitary appearance, being made for the most part of white enamel. The paper cups are stored upside down in the long nickel plate tube just above the vender, thus keeping them free from all dust and therefore germless. The ice used in cooling the water does not come in contact with it at any time, thus preventing any chance of infection from such a source.

A water vender of this design has recently been installed in the office of the commissioner of health of New York city, and the International Tuberculosis society has determined to use it as one of its chief weapons in its battle against the extermination of the great white plague.

A party of rat exterminators, bound for Little Tumbuku, an island in the Fiji group, belonging to Lord Pirie, recently left London. They carried with them a special preparation which, its inventors say, while harmless to other animals, will kill any rats that taste it.

LONDON'S ERUDITE CABMEN

From the London News.

The two cabmen authors who have just been brought to light deserve a place beside the erudite driver discovered by Sir Frederick Bridge. This cabman often drove Sir Frederick home from the Albert hall after the performances of the Royal Choral society, and one evening as he received his fare he astonished the eminent conductor by criticising the tempo at which he took some of the "Messiah" choruses on a previous occasion. This started a friendship between the musician and the cabman, and the former discovered in the latter a very solid foundation of musical knowledge and got to think highly of his opinions. On one occasion, indeed, the cabman asked him to perform a new oratorio by Perosi (which Sir Frederick had not then seen) and offered to lend him a copy of the score.

ECZEMA CURE A MIRACLE? —NO, JUST SOUND SCIENCE

Physicians now admit the superior value of simple medicines for all diseases.

For eczema and other skin diseases certainly nothing in the world could be simpler than oil of wintergreen, carefully combined with such well known healing and antiseptic substances as thymol, glycerine, etc. Read this letter:

"A few years ago eczema covered my limbs, part of my body and began breaking out on my face.

"I began using oil of wintergreen mixed with thymol and glycerine in D. D. D. Prescription. Used five bottles and was cured sound and well. My druggist said it looked almost like a miracle to him; but he explained to me that the use of this oil of wintergreen was just sound science.

"That has been almost a year ago and I see no signs of the disease returning. My skin is just as soft and nice as it ever was.

Any of the above pianos will be sold at our regular prices, BUT THE FIRST THREE PURCHASERS OF PIANOS TUESDAY will each be made a present of one of these cabinet players and also ten rolls of music of which you may make your own selection.

Remember, these players are given absolutely free. We will furnish you with names of many of our purchasers who recently bought the same makes and styles of pianos that we are going to offer you, and you will find on investigating they paid just the same price as we will sell you one for Tuesday, March 16th, and give you a player and ten rolls of music ABSOLUTELY FREE.

NO ONE PARTY WILL BE ALLOWED TO BUY MORE THAN ONE PIANO ON THAT DATE. The first purchaser of one of these pianos Tuesday will be given first choice of the three players which we are going to give away. These pianos and players will be on our floor Monday. All are welcome to call and examine these pianos and players, but no sale will be made before 8 a. m. Tuesday, March 16th. In that way we can be fair and just to all.

Again we will say, these are not old worn-out players that we are to give you, but they are our regular $250.00 players, and in perfect working order in every respect.

You can buy a first-class high-grade piano of us Tuesday for less money than you will be asked of other dealers for a piano of the same value, and with it we will make you a present of one of these players and ten rolls of music.

These pianos have all come in within the last week, nice and fresh direct from the factory.

You can buy one of the high grade pianos as low as $325.00, which is only $75 above the price of the player which we are going to give you free with the piano.

There will be nothing taken in exchange on these sales, and we will give these players with new pianos only.

We have placed the date of this sale for Tuesday, March 16th, instead of Monday, in order to give you a chance to call on Monday and examine these pianos and compare our prices and quality of these pianos with other dealers. And you will find that in comparing quality and price that we are absolutely giving free these three players besides giving you more value for your money than you could get elsewhere.

Very easy terms will be given if purchaser so desires. We make no difference between a time sale and a cash sale, only you pay simple interest on your note.

We welcome all to call and examine this splendid opportunity of getting one of these players ABSOLUTELY FREE.

Tent Cottage Sanatorium

105 CHEYENNE ROAD

These are homes intended for two or three people. They are fully equipped for light housekeeping, have three rooms, with electric lights, water, the best of beds, a north and a south porch, altogether securing all the comforts of the home with all the advantages of a tent. The circulation of air is so controlled that it can be warmed to suit the patient, or be just as cold as the air outside. They are within one block of the street car line, so the patients reach town with only one fare. The sun has free access to the cottages, both forenoon and afternoon. The treatment that is used in the sanatorium has been and is successful in controlling fever, night sweats, hemorrhages, and in getting rid of the bacilli in a short time, and in promoting a natural appetite with perfect assimilation of food. All who are interested in tuberculosis are cordially invited to visit this sanatorium and mingle with the patients and note their improvement. Correspondence invited.

OBITUARY

J. Fred Hedges, who took his life last Sunday afternoon by taking cyanide of potassium, was born September 5, 1878, in Davenport, Ia., came with his parents to Georgetown, Colo., when a small boy, grew to manhood there, and was married to Miss Mary Brigham of that place; later they moved to Cripple Creek, and he was employed in the mines and on the railroad there for several years; then moved to Denver; was brakeman on the Rio Grande railroad for five years. He also lived in Colorado City later, and was a trusted employe of the Colorado Midland railroad, as brakeman. Mr. Hedges traveled extensively, finally coming back to Colorado City, one year ago, and up to a week prior to his death, was employed at the Standard mill. He had a divorced wife and one son and a daughter, both grown and living in Cripple Creek; an aged mother and a sister living in Denver; one sister in San Francisco, Cal., and one sister in Eureka, Utah., and an uncle, L. A. Hedges, and cousin, Mrs. Hattie L. Trout, of 510 South Fifth street, Colorado City. Those who knew him best do not censure him for his rash act, but have only pity for him, knowing that for many years he had faced adversities and sorrows and trouble, and took his life to end it all. Let us hope that he is at rest, and happy with the loved ones who have gone before to the brighter world. We wish to extend our sincere thanks and appreciation to our kind neighbors and friends for their sympathy and assistance in our bereavement, and also for the floral offerings.

The St. Andrew's library board has issued neat invitations in the nature of shamrocks inviting the people to attend the St. Patrick's day social to be held at the home of Mr. and Mrs. H. H. EXHIBITION OF PICTURES FOR BENEFIT OF SCHOOL

An exhibition of pictures, suitable for the decoration of school rooms, will be held at the Columbia school building next Thursday and Friday, under the auspices of the Columbia Parents association. Reviewing the exhibition at Minneapolis, the Minneapolis Journal says:

"The attention of Sunday-school workers is called to the very fine group of religious subjects in the collection, taken from the paintings of Raphael, Plockhorst and others. Kindergartners will find the group pertaining to child life very attractive, and students of architecture will enjoy the magnificent photographs of the famous cathedrals, abbeys and palaces of Europe. The collection embraces pictures of all kinds, and yet there is not a cheap or trifling subject to be found there. The exhibition should appeal to artists and students for the sake of the originals, to people of all ages who enjoy pictures and to social reformers who believe in the democracy of art."

Tuesday is the day. See page 15, advertisement 8.

CHAMBER OF COMMERCE WANTS CARRIERS TO RIDE

A motion expressing the hope that arrangements can be made in the granting of the new franchises to the Colorado Springs and Interurban railway, whereby mail carriers in uniform will be allowed free transportation to and from their routes, was passed at a special meeting of the board of directors of the Chamber of Commerce yesterday. That the concession would prove of benefit to citizens in the improved mail service which would result, was the ground upon which the action was taken.

Resolutions were also passed indorsing house bill No. 423 and senate bill No. 358, both of which provide for the granting of teachers' licenses to graduates of all colleges of the state without examination, instead of only to graduates of the Normal school, as is the case under the present law.

JOE D. LOSES IO DEATH

Popular Running Horse Died Here Friday—Trainer Deeply Grieved by Loss of Pet.

Joe D., the well known running horse owned by Joe Pierson of this city, and well known to followers of the racing game in Colorado Springs, Denver, Pueblo and the entire west, has run his last race. Death was an opponent he could not outrun and Friday morning he died in this city from pneumonia.

Joe D. was valued at $2,000 and was first under the wire so many times that he brought his owner thousands of dollars. The horse had been wintering in Walsenburg and was brought here last Tuesday to get in shape for the spring race meets.

"Shorty" Couch, who has been in constant charge of "Joe D." for the last seven years, is heartbroken by the loss of his pet.

Probably as horse that raced in the west was more familiar to Colorado Springs and Pueblo than Joe D. He was 11 years old.

The Springs players returned home early this morning.

CARMAN SELLS RACING STABLE AND QUITS GAME

LOS ANGELES, March 13.—R. F. Carman, who has been racing an extensive stable at Santa Anita this season, disposed of all his horses at public auction at Santa Anita today, preparatory to his retirement from the turf. The prices realized were remarkably good, the 22 horses bringing a total of $17,035. J. H. Wheatcroft, the British Columbia millionaire, was the heaviest purchaser. He secured Magazine for $4,000, Sir Alvescot for $2,500 and St. Elmwood for $1,000.

Cibot and Orphee held the lead for five days. They have shown good form throughout the race, and finished in splendid condition. Judging from the attendance during the week, the revival of six-day pedestrianism has not proved popular.

TURFMEN ARE PLANNING RACE MEET FOR FLORIDA

JACKSONVILLE, Fla., March 13.—A 26 days' racing meet, with a betting ring in operation, will be opened at Big Tim Sullivan's new track in Dade county, on March 26. The inaugural date was originally set for about this time, but the contractors were unable to complete the plant on schedule time. Next year, however, it is planned to start the meeting immediately after the holidays.

It is expected that in time Jacksonville will become the racing center of the south. Working with this idea in mind stabling accommodations for 500 horses will be provided for next year. At this time there are quarters for only half that number. Associated with Mr. Sullivan in the venture are T. J. Pons, Manning Smith and other wealthy and influential citizens of the state.

Major league ball clubs will leave in the south during the next six weeks much more money than they will take in at the gates but the day of the short and beneficial training trip is getting nearer.

Battling Nelson, who came in 25 seconds, will be heard from again and so will Harry Pulliam.

HEAR GIPSY SMITH SPEAK

Many Colorado Springs People Go to Denver to Hear the Great Evangelist

Colorado Springs people are manifesting great interest in the revival meetings conducted by Gipsy Smith, the great evangelist at the Auditorium in Denver. There has been a large attendance of people from this city at many of the meetings and the number is increasing steadily. A big delegation of Colorado College students heard the evangelist last Thursday.

Gipsy Smith held no meetings yesterday, it being his day of rest, but he will resume this afternoon and evening. A feature will be the mens' parade which will start from the Denver Y. M. C. A. building with ten pastors of all denominations in line. The Western Federation of Miners has reserved 1,5 seats for this occasion. By special arrangement, a space will be reserved this evening for members of the Seventeenth general assembly and their wives.

Before a gathering of 4,000 people in the Denver Auditorium last Friday afternoon, Gipsy Smith said in part:

The reason why we think so flatly of Calvary, and speak so thinningly of the death of the Son of God, is because we have seen sin superficially. When men and women have seen the depths of sin in them they will cry out for a Calvary. You'll have no trouble in believing in the atonement when you once see your own sin. We have learned to call sin by "pretty names." We have learned to spell it with a small "s" instead of a big capital. And we are trying to excuse it and paint it with pretty colors and scratch it out.

It is not my purpose in this campaign to whitewash anyone. We've been doing that too long. Sin must come out before you can call yourself a Christian. And as God has put it, "The people do err in their hearts." It is not cutaneous. It is not a kind of moral measles that you can wash away with a lotion. It is not a dental mistake. It is in the blood. It is in the heart—beyond the reach of reformation, beyond the fingers of the schoolmaster, beyond the power of any human being. Only God can reach it.

And I do not care if you live on Capitol hill or in the tenderloin. I do not care who you are or where you live, you need the new birth.

Take a beautiful little child, born of the most moral man and womay, of a Christian man and woman. The best kind of care is given to the child. It has the best kind of nursing. It is guarded carefully. It is carefully reared, given every school advantage—all this without spiritual training. And when that child becomes a man what have you got? Why, an educated, refined sinner.

HOTEL CONCERT—A special program will be given at the Alta Vista hotel this evening at 8 o'clock by a five-piece orchestra under direction of A. E. English.

Better Not Take Whiskey.

The next time you have a sudden chill—you or any of the folks at home—don't bother with whiskey or waste time. Take quickly a teaspoonful of Perry Davis' Painkiller in half a glass of hot water or milk. Its good record of 70 years proves reliability. At your druggist's. The new size is 25c or 50c (larger) bottle. You ought to have it on hand.

A LOCAL SHOE STORE TO THE FORE

It is with no small amount of pride that the people of Colorado Springs point to a real shoe store that of Wulff-Sullivan Shoe Co., as being one of the most up-to-date shoe establishments, not only in Colorado, but of the entire west.

Their motto, "A Good Place to Buy Good Shoes," has been carried out to the letter, and that coupled with a broad-minded, conservative and courteous manner in conducting the affairs of the store has won for it a warm place in the hearts of all the residents of the community.

In getting the new and cobby effects in modern foot apparel, Wulff-Sullivan Shoe Co. has no equal. Quality is never sacrificed in a single instance to secure the very best at the lowest prices possible, and the public is beginning to appreciate this fact more fully each succeeding season.

So energetic and aggressive has been the policy of the house that practically every line of shoes of any consequence has been offered to them and of all these they have selected the most reputable and reliable ones before the public at this time.

You will find with them the famous "D. Armstrong" shoes of highest character, "Queen Quality" popular footgear, "Grover" soft shoes for tender feet and "Guptill" fancy slippers for the ladies. The new combinations now on display will interest every lady who really loves pretty shoes.

The men, too, have not been overlooked in the slightest degree. "Stetson Shoes," "Dr. Reed Cushion Shoes" and the popular "Regent" makes are here in their splendor. Every leather, style and color are shown in great abundance.

This house bears the distinction of being the only one in the city handling wooden soled shoes for dairy and creamery men, as well as "Moulders' Shoes" for the iron and steel workers employed in our shops.

A line of United States army shoes, such as are worn by cavalrymen, infantrymen, artillerymen and marines are found here exclusively.

The boys' and girls' section is filled to overflowing with shoes made expressly for Colorado sand and grit, having the very best overweight "Rock Oak" soles on every pair. "Ruff-on-Rocks" and the "C. & T. Educators" are sure winners for the young folks. The exclusive models in colored tops are attracting many new customers daily.

Especial attention has been given to wearing qualities, as all shoes for this store are designed in character, weight and workmanship by the management, and no shoes whatever are purchased of wholesale houses, which truly makes this store "A Good Place to Buy Good Shoes."

General Palmer's Own Story

Of His Capture by the Confederates in September, 1862, While Acting as a Spy, His Imprisonment for Four Months in "Castle Thunder," and His Escape.

Written by a Member of the Fifteenth Pennsylvania Volunteer Cavalry, as Told to Him by General Palmer.

The following narrative of one of the most exciting episodes of the Civil War, an episode of which General William J. Palmer was the hero, was first published in Harper's Magazine for June, 1867. Though known to many of the late General's closest friends, it is entirely unfamiliar to the public, and is now published for the first time in Colorado Springs. It is the story of General Palmer's capture, his confinement in a Confederate prison, and his escape, and is as intensely thrilling as anything to be found in the pages of fiction.

Of all the occupations associated with the conduct of war there is none which calls for more soldierly nerve, courage, daring and patriotism as well as that of the secret service. I do not now propose to discuss the moral of the question, as whether or not it is dishonorable to seek for information within an enemy's country in disguise. It is enough to know that the laws of war are universal and inexorable in the punishment of the spy detected as a spy with death.

The hero of the following story was a spy in spite of himself. In relating the dying ordeal through which he was obliged to pass real names in most instances have for obvious reasons been suppressed, while the locale has been retained.

It was one night long ago when I heard it from the lips of its hero. We sat before a pleasant fire. It was late into the night, the family had retired, but we lingered long over our pipes, rehearsing many an adventure by camp and field, discussing this and that campaign, of what would have been the result if things which happened had not happened, and things did not happen which had happened, and all that sort of thing.

It is very easy to correct mistakes in battles long after the bones of its victims are whitening upon the field, and the poorest soldiers of us all, when the sword is sheathed and peace once more blesses the land, may lay out campaigns which would put Grant or Sherman to the blush. But old comrades will get together and talk over those scenes when were the grandest, supremest moments of their lives, and so the General and I lived over again many a skirmish and fight, not forgetting those whose voices are silent in death, recounting our varied experiences since we parted in Shenandoah valley on a bright summer's day in sixty-two.

"But there is a hiatus following Antietam which you have not filled up," I said, during a lull in the conversation. "What became of you for several months? Some one was telling me that you were taken prisoner and in disguise, I think they said."

THE GENERAL'S STORY OF HIS OWN CAPTURE . . .

"I was captured about that time," answered my friend. "But there were circumstances about that affair which made it peculiarly very dangerous for me so long as the war lasted. I don't know that there is any object in telling the story now. Yet I rarely speak of it, probably because few know of it, and ask no questions, and perhaps because of the habit of silence."

I may say here that the General is one of the most reticent of men, modest and reserved by nature, he is a gentleman of elegance and refinement and superior scientific attainments. He has a long and rather angular face with a slightly projecting chin. His forehead is high and his eyes gray in color and set wide apart. There is great determination in my friend's face, but it is determination to repose rather than in action. His manner and the history of his army life justifies the expression in all. So, he has won his star by unflinching courage, by undoubting devotion to duty; the hero of not a gallant deed, he rarely speaks of himself; but I was curious to know the story of his capture and prison life. And this is what he told me:

After the second Bull Run fight you will remember that a great many new troops were pushed into the field, and when, after McClellan took command, it was ascertained that Lee had crossed the Potomac into Maryland, at once all the volunteer militia, recruits and detachments, without regard to completeness of organization, were hurried to the field. At that time, with a captain's commission, I was raising a regiment of cavalry. One morning I received orders, with such a number of men as I had, to report myself directly to General McClellan; which I did without delay, and by his order, on the day of the battle of Antietam, was posted on the left of the line near the river bank. From my position, where I could see much of the fight, and from the fact that during the day I had occasion to carry orders from one end to the other of the line, I was able to judge of the result of the battle. My own opinion, when that awful stillness of night shut down over the field, was, that the contest had been pretty near drawn, but that the enemy were so badly crippled that they would not dare risk another engagement with their backs to the river, and that they would attempt to withdraw across the river immediately.

HE OFFERS TO SPY ON ENEMY'S GROUND . . .

So fully impressed was I with this opinion that I went to General McClellan and offered to cross the river and gain such information as I might of the movements of the enemy. I proposed to go to the south side of the river because I could not go north without running into their battle line, and any movement to return to Virginia would first be known in their rear.

The General consented, provided I would take with me a scout and a Methodist preacher, who, although he might have been a saint, had the audacity of the devil. He was one of the most valuable spies in the service. I was reluctant to take Parson Marshall and the scout along with me, fearing that they would be an embarrassment rather than an assistance; but I finally yielded. As it afterward proved, my intuitions were wise. Had I left them behind, weeks and months of the agony of death might have been spared me. But in this, as in other experiences of life, I found that there was a providential dispensation in it all, and that the pain had its compensating good, as you will see.

I had no definite plan of operations marked out; but several months before I had gained reliable evidence of the loyalty of a man named Jackson, a miller by trade, who lived in Shepardstown, which you know, is on the south bank of the river, and to the rear of the rebel army. During my skirmishing on the day of the fight I had also ascertained that another miller, named Roberts, who lived in a little village on the south side of the stream from where my command was now posted, was also a Union man. My scheme was to cross the river at this point, see Roberts, induce him at once to go to Shepardstown, which was but four miles away, and, in conjunction with Jackson, obtain such information as they could of the movements of the rebels, and that Roberts should then return to me with the news.

SEARCHES FOR SKIFF IN COVER OF DARKNESS . . .

It was past 11 o'clock when we arrived at the ferry on the bank, which at one time had been a ford, but was long out of use. The boatman was not there, and so we searched up and down the bank, among the bushes and for the skiff to see if we could not discover some skiff or dugout in which we could make the passage. But all our efforts were fruitless, and the day altogether assuring, a suggestion was made by Jake, the scout, that the enemy had been there recently and removed the boats. There were none within our reach, that was certain, and so we sat down under the shadow of the bank discussing in low tones the best course of action to pursue.

"There does not appear to be any evidence of the presence of rebels on the other side," said I.

"They wouldn't show their hand if they were there," replied Jake.

"I think we should have heard from them by this time if they were in the village, besides that, the absence of the dogs shows nothing. He ought to be aboard by this time," remarked Marshall.

"But, stop," I said. "Let us hail him. If he comes over we can ascertain whether or not the rebs are there."

"It's a risky business. Hadn't we better go to the" muttered the scout.

"We will not return until we make some effort, at least, to cross the river," I replied, finally adding, "You may go back if you wish."

"I'm in for this campaign, miss or win," As Jake answered he had approached the water's edge and shouted:

"Ferry, ahoy!"

There was no moon that night, and the starlight was partially obscured by a warm mist; yet it was light enough to distinguish objects moving on the other shore, while the air was so quiet that the chants of the katydid could be distinctly heard across the stream. There was no answer to my call, and no evidence of human life appeared among the houses of the lonely village, which lay hid in the shadows of the wooded hills.

FERRYMAN IS ROUSED; A DANGEROUS MANEUVER . . .

"Hillyer-o-o! Boat ahoy!" I cried again. A few moments elapsed, and then a dark object was seen emerging from a house near by. It approached the bank.

"Y-o-o-o!" came ringing to our ears, and shortly after the boat was stemming its way slowly up and across the stream. The moment it touched the bank I recognized its occupant as the ferryman who, during the evening, had been to our camp for some coffee. He was an honest-looking fellow, and professed to be, and I believe was loyal.

"Ah, Captain," he exclaimed, "is that you?"

"Yes, we wish to cross the river. Are there any Johnnies over there?"

"None that belong to the army; but it's rather risky for yer to go cross. The Confed. cavalry are scouting round all the time."

"Well, boss [illegible]. Have you heard any news from Shepardstown?"

"Nothing but stories of the fight. They say the Yanks have been licked awful."

By this time we were in the boat, and after a sharp pull of several moments, wherein all had relapsed into silence or spoke only in whispers, we were landed safely on the southern bank.

"If you should happen to be questioned on no account say that you brought over a Union officer," I said to the boatman as I gave him a liberal fee. "We shall probably return to be taken back before morning."

Five minutes' walk brought us to the house of Roberts, which had been pointed out by the boatman. I was not surprised to find him up and seated with his wife and a young negro woman by a log fire in the large room which was his bedchamber and sitting room at the same time. Before telling him my errand I tried to get rid of the woman, but his wife refused to leave the room.

"It's no use," said the miller. "She won't go. She knows as well as you or I what's up. I s'pose yer after news of the rebs."

"Precisely that, and we wish your assistance," I replied, making a virtue of necessity.

"Well, what is it? You know it's mighty dangerous for me ter be caught foolin' round. They'd hang me quicker'n winkin'; but I'm true blue, an'll do anything in reason."

OUTLINES HIS PLAN TO HIS CONFEDERATE . . .

"What I wish to do is simple enough, and need not get you into trouble. I wish you to go to Shepardstown, see Jackson the miller. You know him?"

"I should think so."

"You and he can find out together if there are any indications of an intention of the rebels to recross the river."

"I see," said Roberts, striking one hand with the other in a significant way, "hit on the right man, but the darkey—Cap'n, Jackson's all right, I know that. It's a good piece ter Shepardstown. I must ride, an' I might lose my horse."

And Roberts settled himself back in his chair as if he didn't intend leaving until the war was over.

I had no time to reply to him before his wife asserted her woman prerogative and declared she "wouldn't listen to it." It's certain death ter go that; besides, yer've no right ter leave yer wife all alone such troublous times as these."

Leaving the parson, who now came to my aid, to talk with the woman, I urged Roberts to undertake the journey, offering him $300 for the horse. Whether or not the sight of the money stimulated his courage and patriotism I cannot tell; but he consented just as Marshall had clenched his closing argument with the wife by the promise that we would remain until her husband returned.

We calculated that it would take Roberts three hours at the outside to go to Shepardstown and return. Jake was to go with him up the road a short distance, conceal himself in the woods in sight of the road, and be ready to give the alarm should any danger threaten our friend.

In five minutes the horse was saddled, and from the window I saw the two figures as they noiselessly disappeared in the thick darkness which had now succeeded the half light of the earlier evening. I did not for a moment leave my post, but sat and gazed out into the gloom and mist for a drizzling rain commenced to fall. Thinking and thinking until it seemed as if my brain would burst. My ear caught the slightest murmur of the leaves, the water dropping from the eaves reverberated through the chambers of my brain, the crackling of a twig seemed louder than the report of a cannon. Each bunch and stump took on the form of a man, the rail fence was a line of battle, the pile of logs a battery in position, [illegible] and the [illegible] of saddles approaching the house, to vanish into the night and take on new shape.

A DRAMATIC SCENE IN THE MILLER'S CABIN . . .

Within the room, which now was in deep shadow, for the fire had been left to burn low for fear of attracting the attention of some passerby, I could dimly see the forms of the miller's wife and the preacher. Singularly enough, they were discussing some technical point of theology. In the chimney corner sat the negress. She did not appear to be listening to the talk of the others, but with her chin resting in her hands was bowed forward, gazing, gazing into the smouldering embers, whose light gave her a deep, rich color of bronze. It was a dramatic picture that figure crouched there in the firelight. During the [illegible] hours that followed, while I watched and waited, I found myself speculating as to the cause of her presence there. The wife I doubted. With the negress, her color was the pledge of her fidelity. She proved it afterward.

And those hours! I sat by the window, counting each second as it passed. They were hours. I wondered what our army was doing. Most likely, gathering the wounded from the battlefield. Where were the rebels? Would they retreat across the river. Should I get knowledge of their movement? What complete destruction would come upon their disordered masses should McClellan strike at them in the act of crossing! Again and again did I look at my watch. Where was Roberts? Could he meet with mishap? Would he return within the hour named? Could there be any doubt of his loyalty? He might betray us. These and a thousand queries and imaginations reasonable and fanciful crossed my mind.

One, two, three, four hours passed by. One more and daylight would be upon us. The rising sun must not find us here. Roberts' time was up. Where was he? What was the cause of his delay? I must not recross the river without seeing him.

It was just at this moment of anxiety and doubt that I was sensible of a tremulous motion which jarred the house to its foundations. It was slight at first but increased steadily. This could be no creation of the imagination. By a singular psychological phenomenon, which I cannot explain, the presence of a real danger dispersed all these vague fantasies. All my faculties resumed their normal condition. Objects assumed their natural shape.

HEARS ENEMY APPROACHING CABIN . . .

Within the room there absolute silence. The miller's wife had fallen asleep in her chair, the parson, stretched upon the floor with his head upon his arm, was evidently in some dream of theological bliss for he was snoring earnestly. The negress had not changed her position, except that her head was slightly turned, as if listening. The sound increased. Yes, far into the darkness I could hear the click of steel against steel. I sprang to my feet. The noise aroused the sleepers.

"What's the matter, captain?" demanded Marshall, feeling for his revolver belt.

"Be quiet, keep still," I replied, trying to listen. No, it is not infantry nor artillery. Yes, it is a body of cavalry with a train of wagons and [illegible] coming this way. They must be rebels, for we know the right of the Potomac [illegible]

"Oh, she will be taken, and we shall be murdered," screamed the woman.

"Silence, fool, you'll [illegible]

"Massa, cap'n, you'se [illegible] safe dar. Come up de ladder ter my place; yer can see better dar."

"The girl's right—plain," said Marshall, [illegible]

"Thank God, he is off! So much is accomplished," I exclaimed. "If the rebels are coming, we shall have rough work before night. But there is Roberts, just in the nick of time."

As I spoke the miller rode slowly into the yard, dismounted without unsaddling his horse, put him in the shed, which answered to the name of stable, and then, with a long look up the road by which he had come, the miller entered the house.

"I'm afeard you'll get caught!" was his hurried exclamation. "I've ridden as fast as I could, but that beast is not a racer. I see there are troops in the village, and a lot of foot soldiers are comin' down the road just behind me."

"Did you see Jackson?"

"Yes, I saw him. He went out and spied around. He came back bime-by and said that big gangs of men were at work shoveling down the banks of the canal; the water, you know, has been out for some time. Jackson thinks, and so do I, that the rebel army are [illegible] back sure. But I tell yer, cap'n, yer'll be caught if yer don't start mighty quick."

"Yes, yes," I replied, impatient to get every item of intelligence. "But what did the townspeople say? Were there soldiers in the village?"

"Wounded men? yes, heaps of 'em—the houses were full. They all say the Yanks have been licked."

During this talk the miller had kept his eyes on the road, and as he finished his report he ran to the door and instantly returned with his face pale with fear, crying:

"The game is up. You can't reach the river now unless you can walk over a thousand rebel bayonets."

The miller was right, for a large body of troops had poured out of the woods at a quickstep. Passing the house, they broke into squads, some entering the houses near the river, others marching beyond the town, while the larger body stacked their arms and appeared to be making preparations to go into camp. I saw at once that there was no chance of escape. They were picketing the roads and posting sentinels.

A PERILOUS MOMENT FOR GENERAL PALMER . . .

Until this moment I had not fully realized that I wore the uniform of the United States army. In truth, I had not at all anticipated the juncture of affairs, and was hardly prepared for it. Certainly, my calculations had not included the thought of capture; and now, with this important knowledge in my possession, the idea was doubly odious. But it was imminent at that moment, for several soldiers were approaching the house.

"De lor, de lor!" muttered the negro woman, as for a second time she seized me by the arm and dragged me toward the ladder.

"Do not breathe a word of our presence here unless they have found out something, and then we will come down," I said to the miller and his wife as Marshall and I hurried up the ladder to our hiding place. Once there, I knew from the talk of the soldiers that they had not come for us. They wanted some corn ground, and Roberts started away to his mill with one of them. We were safe for the moment; but how long was this confinement to continue? And I stared out of the window to see the sun, which had now risen above the hill-tops, shining down upon groups of men, standing or cooking at their campfires, while its bright rays glittered upon a battery of artillery which had gone into position in the field upon the rising ground just outside the forest. The caissons and horses were taken to the rear, while a party of pioneers commenced throwing up earthworks in front of the cannon, which appeared to be placed so as to cover the road crossing at the old ford.

"That looks like fighting," whispered Marshall.

"No, they are too deliberate about it. It is a precaution against any movement of ours from below. There can be no doubt about it; Lee means to retreat. If McClellan could know of all this the war might be ended within twenty-four hours. Do you think you can get across the river?"

"I can try." And the preacher rose to his feet. He was a brave, true-hearted fellow.

"You had better go up stream; it is safer than to attempt the passage below. Make a big effort, for you can appreciate the importance of success as well as I."

"But what will you do?"

"The best I can. Lie quiet here until these fellows leave. They won't stay forever. Good-by, and good luck to you."

"Good-by, captain. I hope we shall see you in a few hours."

THE GENERAL'S FATE HANGS BY A MERE THREAD . . .

With what eagerness did I listen to the parson as he passed into the room where the soldiers were! A tremor of anxiety crept over me as I heard him question them as to the number of men in the command, and why they were there.

"He will excite suspicion," I thought. "Why does he ask such questions? Success in these adventures has made him foolhardy. They will arrest him." But no, he is out of the house, and now he strides away up the road as if he belonged here. He passes through the camp. Why does he stop there to talk with the guard? The fate of the nation may hang on his words. But he moves on unmolested; and now he is lost in the thick underbrush which skirts the edge of the woods.

"Pray heaven he may get to McClellan!" and I looked up at the sun, which—as quickly mounting to the zenith. My watch told me it was nearly 10 o'clock. After all, if Marshall arrested, it might be too late. But Jake, the scout, ought to be within the Union lines ere this.

One hour, two hours slowly moved by. There was but little change in the position of the rebel troops. They seemed to be waiting. Once or twice a mounted courier came to and went away from a large tent in the rear of the batteries. Now and then the pickets would exchange shots with my men, who were under cover on the northern bank of the stream. Far up the river I could discern a dark object moving toward the other bank. Could this be Marshall? There were rapids at that point, and the swift current bore the object downward, and nearer to my sight and to the bullets of the rebel soldiers as well, for they saw it, and fired at it. But the boat moved steadily to the opposite shore, and there it shot in behind a rocky cliff.

"Safe, safe!" I exclaimed, as I wiped the perspiration from my brow. I could now see the figure of a man, which I was sure was Marshall, creep up the hill toward my soldiers. Quite a knot of them had gathered together to welcome the refugee. As the parson joined them I could see him gesticulating and pointing across the river.

AN ANXIOUS MOMENT WATCHING FOR ENEMIES . . .

What does the fool stop there to talk? Will my thought there come the loud bang of a cannon. I turned to see the first wisp of white smoke above the rebel batteries, carrying it toward the front, where it was dissipated among the leaves and branches, and then there was the ringing, tearing sound of a hollow concussion—shell is not a football to be played with, and as this one burst within a few rods of the group, the crowd to be of the same opinion, for they immediately separated. That instant, however, had fixed my business beyond a peradventure. I did not know it for several moments.

So intensely was I occupied in imagining Marshall's progress to headquarters and the grand possibilities which opened up for the cause, that I was not conscious of the presence of the negro woman until I heard her stifled exclamation. It had come to be the voice of a friend.

"Massa Cap'n, you'se caught fo' sure now. H'yar, jes tuk off dem blue clothes and put on dat 'ar jacket and pants of Massa Roberts. Mighty quick! Dem's a-comin' fra de camp wid Massa Roberts, an' dey is arter you, sir, sh!"

There was not an instant for reflection. My uniform meant punishment to the people of the house. These ideas hurriedly reflected, Libby, Salisbury, imprisonment, starvation, rotting to death. In this homespun there was a chance to escape.

I did not reflect—how could I when the guard was so near the house that I could distinguish every detail of their jagged forms?—that as a soldier I was entitled to the rights of a prisoner of war—protection of health and life; as an enemy in disguise, I was a spy, and my claims upon humanity was embraced in a short shrift and a stout cord. If I did think of this it was after I had exchanged my honored insignia of rank and service for the butternut clothes, and had heard Roberts' voice in the yard, exclaiming:

"The gentlemen came in late last night, and the nigger gave 'em a place ter sleep. I haven't seen 'em."

"Thank you for the cue." Thought I, as rapidly descending the ladder, I gained the room before they had fairly entered, and saluted the officer who headed the party with "a complacent, self-assured "Good morning, sir."

The gentleman was a little surprised at my manner and respectable appearance, for I was in the miller's best clothes.

"I am sorry to trouble you, sir, but my commanding officer, Colonel Heartly, requires your presence at headquarters."

"Certainly, captain; I will go with you at once."

TAKEN PRISONER IN CLOTHES OF A SPY . . .

As I never anticipated capture, I had not prepared any story. In that walk of five minutes between the house and the camp I had to do the work of a Collier or Dickens—to create a character, and account for his existence and presence in that locality. If any slight could have twisted my nerves, it was when I turned the corner of Colonel Heartly's tent and beheld Jake, the scout, and the ferryman who had brought us over. The guard which surrounded them with fixed bayonets told me that Jake and I stared each other in the face with an indifference which would have done credit to Englishmen traveling in the same diligence. So far as Jake and Roberts were concerned, I was safe. But the ferryman, by a chance word, might ruin me. It was necessary for him to recognize me in my new costume, for if I were discovered I should be hung as a spy.

I did not look at the ferryman, but at once addressed myself to the commanding officer, who stood in front of his tent:

"You sent for me, colonel?"

"Yes; I shall be obliged to put you under arrest."

"For what cause?"

"You are here under suspicious circumstances. I learn that you crossed the river late last night with two other persons. One of these has just returned in a skiff, and has been talking with the Yankee pickets on the other side; and this man—pointing to Jake, who was staring stupidly at the speaker—"was caught in the attempt to recross on a raft. These circumstances are all against you, sir."

"They may be to you, Colonel, who are a soldier, and must see these things from a different point of view than I, a citizen. I can explain how I came here. My name is Peters. I am a citizen of Baltimore, and before your army came into the state was at Cumberland looking after some mining interests in that neighborhood. On my way back I found that I was likely to get into trouble with one or the other of the armies, and so came this way in the hope of avoiding both."

TO HEADQUARTERS FOR AN EXAMINATION . . .

"I regret exceedingly," replied the colonel, "after a moment's reflection, "that I cannot set you at liberty, for I have no doubt of the truth of your story; but my orders are strict in cases like yours. I must send you to General P— for examination; his decision will be final."

This was said in a polite, almost apologetic manner, yet with a firmness which admitted of no question.

"I hope," I replied, "there will be a little delay."

"We shall move tonight or to-morrow morning."

"But what are you a-gwineter do wid me?" demanded Jake, who had been listening with clownish interest to the conversation. "If I can't go on for Linkum, let me git back to Harper's Ferry with my woman an' the young uns."

I could not help looking at the scout with a feeling of admiration. He was the perfect representative of one of those miserable devils who go wandering through the border states picking up jobs. A shiftless, shifting, thieving fellow he looked.

"Let the braggart go," said the colonel to one of his officers. "He is not worth the keeping."

To which decision my heart responded "Amen." But I betrayed no feeling whatever, and turned my back on my confederate. Meanwhile, there was the ferryman and Roberts yet under arrest. I wished to get rid of them. Every instant that they remained increased my danger.

The ferryman claimed, with reason, that he was not responsible for those he brought across the river—that was his business. His father had been at the ferry before him, Roberts put in the same sort of plea. His house had been a place of stopping place for years. He never asked questions so long as people paid for their lodging."

The colonel hesitated, when a remark from me decided him.

"Colonel Heartly, I am right sorry that I am the cause of getting these people into trouble, they are residents here and are always within your reach."

"That is just, Mr. Peters; they ought not to be detained. You may go, both of you."

A great weight of distrust and fear was removed from my heart when I saw the two men walking down the road together. With their absence, the rope in my mind's eye, had shrunk to a thread.

SCENE OF TERROR IN THE ENEMY'S CAMP . . .

The following morning, as the troops were astir, I stood watching the movements on the further bank of the stream. I saw Marshall's progress, and would be satisfied in coming to my purpose on the night before, but the rebel guard had forgotten nothing. As I took hold of the bridle my hand, as in contact with hers, a warm pressure was the only future I could make for a day or two. She seemed to understand that we were watched, and with a whispered God bless you she walked away to her home.

We came up the rebel army at Hagerstown, in all its appointments. I never witnessed such a scene of confusion. They were in full retreat, and I should have thought it a disgraceful one, but there were no evidences of panic. How eagerly did I listen for the shout of McClellan's artillery. But to the north it was as quiet as a Sabbath morning. Here everything was in disorder; artillery, infantry, huddled in dismounted guns—all upon the bank. Some were rushing over the miserably improvised bridge; others attempted the ford. Wagons plunged in the stream; mules, cattle, horses, struggling, scrambling, swimming hither and thither.

What a glorious opportunity lost. Why did not McClellan strike hard and strong? Had Marshall failed to deliver the message? But what use to ask these questions? Lee had placed the Potomac between his army and ——[illegible].

General P——, to whose command Col. Heartly belonged, was not at Shepardstown, so, dragging our way along among the straggling host as best we could, we made for Martinsburg where P—— had gone.

Probably I could not have selected, had I had the power, a more inauspicious moment in which to have made the acquaintance of that individual before whom we at last arrived. He listened with manifest impatience to Colonel Heartly's relation of the circumstances of my arrest.

"Where are the other prisoners—the ferrymen, the miller and the man who tried to —— the river?"

"Exhibiting the last I knew they were citizens of the village and released them. The other—man was too much of an idiot to be harmful."

"Well, Colonel," replied his chief, "you are a good patriot and an excellent artillery officer, but I should never select you to catch spies. You have thrown away the certain key to unravel this business, the proof which would have convicted this man whose story I don't believe one word of—not a word. Where were you, sir, three days ago?"

CLOSE QUESTIONS AND READY-WITTED ANSWERS . . .

This last question was addressed to me. I answered him calmly. "I was in Hagerstown."

"Did you see any large bodies of troops there?"

I remembered hearing on the day of Antietam that a portion of our cavalry who had escaped from Harper's Ferry had passed through or near Hagerstown and had captured several hundred wagons which must have been in the rear of and belonged to the rebel army. So I thought I was safe in my answer.

"I did not."

"You saw no soldiers passing through the town?"

"There were a few who might have been in charge of wagon trains."

Mr. Peters—that is the name you have chosen to call yourself by?"

"That is my name."

I have no doubt but what you are a man of education; you have the manners of one. You may be an owner of mines, and all that; but you can't make me believe that you could be in Hagerstown and not know if a division of troops had passed, or that any man in his senses would go wandering about the country while two armies were maneuvering and fighting great battles. Now Mr. Peters, I think you are a spy. The escape of your comrades will not help you much, for I shall send you to Richmond with a report of the whole case, which if it does not hang you it will be because there is no hemp in our capital.

Addressing an officer who stood near, he continued: "Captain, this man will be sent with the party of prisoners which is to start this morning. I will give General Winder a special report of his case."

I made no reply to this speech, except such answer as the eye may give of contempt and scorn.

SENT PRISONER TO GENERAL WINDER . . .

"I am really sorry for you, sir," said the kind-hearted Colonel, as I was led from the room. "The General is in an ugly mood this morning; this infernal retreat gets one's teeth on edge. But you need not despair. Get your friends at work and you may get by Winder's court-martial although they do say he is a—[illegible] hanger. I like the affair well enough to take this party to Richmond and I will speak a good word for you. You shall have your horse. Good-by, Mr. P——! Good luck to you!" And the honest fellow grasped me warmly by the hand as he went away to attend to his duties.

An hour from that time I was riding down the Winchester road on my way to Richmond.

We had not been on the road half an hour when I found that Captain Graham had been as good as his word. The officer in charge of the party treated me with kindness, sharing his blankets and meals with me. There were several other prisoners in the party. Two were citizens of Maryland or pretended to be, who had been arrested under circumstances somewhat similar to my own. Others were soldiers who had been captured at the battles of South Mountain and Antietam. The faces of these I carefully examined for fear that they might have known me in the ranks; fortunately they belonged to eastern regiments and had never served in our wing. I am safe from that direction, I thought.

As we journeyed down the Shenandoah Valley, I could see with what a hand of iron war had pressed upon this lovely region. The fields were not waving with grain as when we saw them in sixty-one. Now the farm houses were deserted or in ruins; every few rods the hillsides and meadows were marked with the track of wagon wheels; the feet of men and animals had trampled out of its every green thing—the face of the country seemed to have been turned into a vast camping ground. It was the Garden of Eden after the Evil.

At Martinsburg I had spent the last of my small stock of change in the purchase of a pair of spurs in the hope that an opportunity would occur when I could escape from the guard. But I found that several of them were splendidly mounted while my horse was utterly broken down after the first day's march and neither persuasion of spur nor whip could induce him to proceed faster than a bone breaking trot or with a sinking heart I gave up the [illegible] of escape.

HE PLANS ESCAPE BUT IS CLOSELY WATCHED

A [illegible] there were posted detachments of [illegible] to guard [illegible] and either [illegible] I was up [illegible] given the [illegible] last if I moved even [illegible] I was watched by [illegible] guards [illegible] I did [illegible] [illegible] I would [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

[illegible] parts arrived at the office of General Winder in the city of Richmond. We were among the first who had come direct from the seat of war. A [illegible] officers and women, white and black, followed us to the prison door. Winder was not in the office. He had gone home [illegible] Lieutenant Dave Lavenstein said he would be in the night never return.

My case was the first of the party to be considered, and as I gave the clerk my name he looked up from his writing and looked at me. A [illegible] glance of his thought as with a [illegible] down his eye wandered down the line of my captive companions, and again as it ran over the package of papers which gave the history of each unfortunate, and one upon that of mine which General P—— had kindly marked "Special importance," my heart beat with anxious fear.

Whose case is this?" he said, which is the man?

The officer of the guard pointed to me and replied: "This is the gentleman—Mr. Peters."

"What the d—l do they continue to arrest citizens for? We shall have all the Border States down here by-and-by. Castle Thunder is full of these people now," replied the clerk as he opened the letter and glanced over the four closely written pages and then without reading a word, broke out in a string of oaths, which seemed to pass familiarly from his lips.

"What does General P—— suppose we have to do here?" he continued. "Here is a story as long as one of Winder's courts-martial—that it do to keep," and he threw the letter into a pigeonhole in the box over his table. As I saw it disappear among the collection of papers, I felt a sense of relief.

SAVED FROM NOOSE BY HAPPY ACCIDENTS . . .

The late hour, the weary, impatient officer at his post, the long letter with its detailed charges which were intended to fix guilt and conviction upon me beyond escape—these were my salvation from a hangman's noose. I thanked God then. I thank God tonight.

When I entered the prison yard and the doors of Castle Thunder closed behind, I gazed up the long room which was to be my home for long months with a feeling of real gladness which I could not have believed possible a week before. This was confirmed the next morning, when I could sit and watch the prisoners as they walked to and fro. Not a face did I see that I had ever met before, and with renewed confidence did I enter upon my new role.

Castle Thunder was one of those large tobacco warehouses that are characteristic of Richmond. The premises yet remained in the rooms where I was placed with two or three hundred prisoners, most of whom were either deserters from the rebel army or citizens who had been arrested because suspected of Union sentiments or men suspected of being spies as in my case. And when these people crowded about me hungry for some new thing with which to feed their minds, starving for the rest of change, I told no little of my story as I might. My name I said, was Peters—I was a citizen of Maryland. I had been arrested without cause. This was in the early days of my new life. As time wore on and I came to know these men, to read their faces as we read books, I learned whom to trust and whom to shun or deceive.

MANY SPIES AMONG PRISONERS WITHIN CASTLE THUNDER . . .

There were, we then twenty-seven, [illegible] spies in that room. Some were north-born men. A [illegible] who [illegible] in the Army of [illegible] were in the [illegible] of [illegible] general in the army. [illegible] had been captured in Virginia, at Tuscaloosa, or in Texas. One had been engaged in running the blockade between Wilmington and Nassau. He overstayed his day at Nassau and was arrested. He had been in prison thirteen months. Another was buying cotton in Charleston, was suspected, taken up and for nine months had been buried here. And yet another had been a clerk in the rebel war department, an inadvertent word of sympathy with the north had [illegible] been for several months. It was days, weeks, months before I came to know these men for what they were; before that confidence was given which is the result of intention rather than from any rule of action. Some of these spies did not reveal themselves until the last moment. Singular characters were they, combining a subtle cunning, a knowledge of men and things, a daring greater than that which faces the cannon's mouth. Some pursued their dangerous calling from the purest patriotism, others for its adventure and more for gain. Not to one of them did I reveal my true name. Not even hinted that I was an officer in the United States army. And yet they trusted me, and never pressed me to tell them what by and by, they had the right to suspect.

I had been in Castle Thunder some two months without making an effort to be released. I did not wish to disturb that paper which I had seen thrust into a pigeonhole in Winder's office when one morning one of our men handed me a copy of the Richmond Enquirer which by clubbing together we were able to buy day by day. The paper had not gone its usual round ere my turn to read it had not come, and the simple fact of giving it to me at that early hour was enough.

ALMOST BETRAYED BY NEWSPAPER ARTICLE . . .

Red Eye, as he was nicknamed, did not need a point at a paragraph which occupied a prominent place in the paper to have convinced me that I was on the very verge of being discovered. A criminal condemned to the gallows could not have suffered the torture of [illegible] the more acute, could sense of its reality than did I as my eye at a single stroke took in the contents of that short, fatal paragraph. It ran thus:

WHERE IS HE?

We clip the following from the Philadelphia Press. We have looked over the list of prisoners captured within the time mentioned but find no record of Captain P——. It would be interesting to know if he was captured, and what has become of him.

"WHERE IS CAPTAIN P——?"

On the night of the day of the battle of Antietam Captain P—— of the —— Pennsylvania cavalry with two scouts crossed the Potomac river at a point a few miles below Shepardstown with a view to reconnoiter the enemy's position and if possible to ascertain whether or not Lee was making any movement to recross the river in retreat. As we learn now from one of the scouts who was sent back by Captain P—— with the desired information which by the way arrived too late, a detachment of the enemy during the night had taken possession of the ford, and it was only by a close squeeze that the scout was able to get past their pickets and make his escape. He left the captain at the house of a miller who resides a [illegible] what he knows or is ignorant of the fate of Captain P——. The presumption is that he was taken prisoner.

[illegible] Press, June 5.

[illegible] the question of the Press [illegible] first became of him.

[illegible] as with [illegible] and stared at the [illegible] characters before me as if each [illegible] had [illegible] each note in some [illegible] knowledge of Mr. Myers [illegible] before.

GENERAL WILLIAM J. PALMER,
From a Photograph Taken in His Later Life.

divide into squads of three or more for convenience in [illegible] and sleeping. I had chosen for my companion the sergeant of the floor, a Union man who had been captured in the early part of the war, and whose long imprisonment had given him this petty official position. With him were two others—Chandler, who [illegible] spy in the service of the Confederate States, and Burt Tennesseean who had been pressed into the rebel service and "[illegible]."

We had anticipated that a night like this would come when we had the choice of an attempt to escape or certain death. Through a negro who used to bring vegetables and other [illegible] into the prison we obtained a file, and at [illegible] moments, when the noise was loudest in the room, had made a saw from the blade of a jackknife which I fortunately had in my possession. Our quarters—if I may give that title to the six feet square of floor space between one of the tobacco presses and the wall in the end and corner of the room farthest from the doors—were [illegible] and [illegible] admirably located for the hazardous undertaking which we at once began.

The room in which we were confined was [illegible] from the level of the yard several feet. Our hope was to cut through the planking of the floor, drop down into a sort of subcellar which was underneath and which opened into the yard. The sergeant told us there was no guard there. We hoped to pass through that inclosure, gain the street and then trust to luck in our efforts to get out from the city and to find our way as best we might, to the Union lines.

We could not work at the hole in the floor during the night, the grating sound of the saw upon the oak plank would have reached the ears of the guard or aroused some of our neighboring prisoners. In the daytime, even we were obliged to keep constant watch lest the prisoners walking back and forward should hear the noise. We were able in a measure to conceal our movements by a cot bedstead which the sergeant had placed in our corner under plea of my illness. Under the cover of this bed one of us worked at the hard work. With the miserable apology for a saw and the far-removed occasions when we could work the grass was fearfully slow.

IS RECOGNIZED BY NEW PRISONER . . .

Days and weeks passed by. But a new and unforeseen danger threatened me. Hearing nothing from the extract in the Press, I had grown more confident. The "Where is he" had passed by unnoticed by any of those who could identify me.

One day I was promenading the length of the [illegible] (the room in the chances of our escape when a new prisoner was brought in. It was always my policy to see every recent arrival before he could see me, so as to avoid the risk of surprise in the event of recognition. Ordinarily I was safe from this as the Yankee prisoners from the start were kept in Libby. Making one of the party who now crowded about the newcomer I was able to get a good look at his face. It was not one to be forgotten when once seen. It had met my eyes before—but where? and when? As I gazed at the man I was certain that I had met him personally, and notwithstanding my inability to locate time and place, I retained enough of recollection to be certain that our previous encounter had not been a pleasant one. I was about to turn away when his eye [illegible] an evil eye—caught mine.

"Ah!" he said, "I have seen you before."

Looking him steadily in the eyes I replied:

Indeed! I don't remember when I have ever met you. My name is Peters, and I live in Maryland. Where do you come from?"

"I'm Frank Mc—, from Lexington, Kentucky. But if I don't take you for Captain P—— of the Fed cavalry, I hope I may be d—d. You're the perfect image of that man, cuss him.

These resemblances are very common. I replied. I expect to be taken for Abe Lincoln next. But what are you in here for?"

As I took the question I felt a chill [illegible] down my back as if I had been laid over an iceberg. In a flash I remembered the occasion of my first knowledge of Mr. Myers. I was before [illegible] one, and has been placed there since [illegible] Winder has been excited. We must wait."

Silently did we replace the plank holding it in its place by two wedges introduced from the bottom, filling up the crevice made by the saw with dirt so that to the casual eye there was no evidence that the plank had been [illegible].

NARROW ESCAPE FROM DETECTION . . .

Sleep did not visit my eyelids that night. Anxiously did we wait for the morning. It came with an order from Winder to have all the prisoners of our room turned out into the yard. The room was to be cleaned out. It was a part of the duty of the sergeant to see that the room was cleaned and the squad of prisoners who were engaged in this work were usually under his direction but in this instance an officer of Winder's accompanied them in their rounds, carefully examining the floors and walls as the sergeant told us after. When they came to our quarters I trembled lest they found our track, but the end of the plank we had cut was so near the tobacco press that no one stood on it nor did any one notice the cut. I had made. I thought the officer in charge ade a closer examination here than at the other ends. But he didn't find anything.

So we passed through that scrape without [illegible] caught. We didn't [illegible] for the guard after that was always stationed in the yard and we knew very much that it we found it our error to give away the dungeon would follow detection.

One day when Libby surcharged with Yankee prisoners, poured some of its excess into ours, Colonel Miles, of my own state, and an intimate friend walked into the room. Seeing him from a distance, I retreated to my corner and waited until he came that way and we were alone and then stared him blankly in the face. But it was no use. He recognized me at once, and exclaimed:

"My God! here in Captain P——!"

"I am not P——. My name is Peters, and I am a civilian (Keep walking, Miles)," I continued in a low voice while my face was as impassable as ever. "I will speak to you by-and-by."

He said not another word, but resumed his promenade. Later in the evening we seized an opportunity to speak to each other.

"We all thought you were dead, P——."

"You see I am not, and I hope the gentleman of the pale horse will not ride across my track for some time."

"How can you here, and in this disguise?"

I detailed the circumstances of my arrest, and ended with an appeal to Miles that he would not mention to any one that he had seen me here. Not even to my family and friends, should you get home to the north. Let them believe me dead, anything, rather than the exposure which would certainly take place should they make an effort to have me released. The time may come, should you never hear of me again. But no keep the secret forever. It can do no good to tell of it, and I might be misunderstood.

The colonel promised me all I asked. I did not see him again for the early morning found him on his way to Salisbury prison.

PLEASE REASON IS APPARENTLY NO. 1 . . .

I had now been in prison for over three months and released hopeless for I did not dare avail myself of the influence of friends and I could not claim the privileges and rights of a prisoner of war. Sometimes I despaired of release, but I was hopeful in the main, and used every effort to gain my liberty. I found a friend when I least expected it. The jailer of our prison was a relative of a banker in Washington, who was well known to me. This did also such to heart a Unionist and had taken this position to a [illegible] office in the [illegible], he came interested in my story and, after much persuasion I induced him to exhibit the services of Mr. G—— of N. [illegible] Carolina in my behalf. I had no [illegible], so that my kind advocate was obliged to dispense with the [illegible] of a retainer, but the fall was the quarter of a valuable silver watch. My proposition was to give him an order for $—— in gold on friends of mine in Philadelphia in exchange for the watch in the event of my [illegible] through the intercession of Mr. G——, to whom the watch was to be given as soon as I was at liberty. Upon this [illegible] at once set at work, but on the threshold of his door he was met by Winder, who refused to "listen to the scheme."

"Better hold twenty honest men than permit one rogue to escape." He [illegible] ing of Mr. Peters' case, but there was no object in his release. He could not have been arrested without good reason, and so on.

So much was gained, anyway. I was sure that Winder knew nothing about me. So I made another proposition. That I would go north, and any civilian held by the Federals whom they should select should return in my place. Thanks to the suggestion of a [illegible] named Farin, who had recently been added to the number of our unfortunates, this offer of mine was taken past Winder to higher authority.

FARIN, A PRISONER, IS UNIQUE CHARACTER . . .

While this is pending let me describe Farin, who was the most remarkable man I ever saw, and although his story has no direct relation to mine, yet it is a link in the chain of that eventful period of my life which can not well be omitted.

Farin was a Canadian by birth and residence and, as I knew him then, was a most enthusiastic supporter of the southern cause. For four years he had made this cause his own. Hardly a battle had been fought since the first Bull Run that Farin was not present and then in the thickest of the fight. He did not join the service because he preferred to do "general staff duty," as he termed it so at one time or another he had accepted the hospitalities of nearly every general officer in Lee's army. But he returned these courtesies with interest. He spent money with great liberality, his supper parties were the costliest, the most recherche of any in the camp, or in the capital for that matter for Farin was a favorite in the fashionable circles of Richmond. He was an accomplished linguist, a fair musician, an elegant dancer, and a poet of no mean order. An elegy by him on the death of Stonewall Jackson, written in prison and published in the Richmond papers, was full of tender pathos and fine poetic feeling.

But how came he in prison? One night after a wine supper, given in honor of his proposed departure for Canada, and when his warm hearted friends had filled him with wine, Farin took it into his head to put to bed in a [illegible] somewhat intoxicated [illegible], a [illegible] who was [illegible] ately connected with General Lee.

FARIN AT LIFE FOR PASS NORTHWARD . . .

The next morning accompanied by Davis' private secretary, Farin went to Winder's office to get a pass to go through the lines. His friend went in for the pass while he remained in the office outside. Very soon his friend returned.

"Winder says he wishes to see you."

Farin entered the presence of the man who, at that moment, had more practical power in Richmond than did Davis himself.

"You wish to go north, Mr. Farin?"

"Yes, sir, to my home in Montreal."

Winder gazed at him steadily in the face for a moment and then with a diabolical sneer exclaimed:

"You won't go, Mr. Farin. I arrest you as a spy. Captain, he continued to the officer of the guard, "I give this man in your charge. Permit no one to speak to him. Take him to Castle Thunder."

And here he was.

The incidents of his life and arrest I learned not only from him but from others, and knew them to be true from the fact that he was visited by crowds of young men who were high in influence in the rebel army and government. Young Lee, Stuart, Hampden and others, some and sympathized with this victim of Winder's caprice, cursing that individual with as much earnestness as if he were the keeper of Camp Douglas instead of Castle Thunder.

Farin's conduct in the prison was that of a calm, self-poised gentleman, but above all there was a philosophy in all he said and did which sometimes reached the point of audacity, and I, who watched and studied him closely, imagined I detected something of bravado in it all. In a few weeks his friends had obtained an order for his release. An examination of his trunk and papers had been made by Winder's people, but not anything was found which would criminate him beyond a slight expression of pleasure written in his notebook upon seeing the stars and stripes raised again at Norfolk. Not another particle of evidence could Winder obtain against him. When the order of release was brought to him by a friend he refused to leave Castle Thunder. He said:

I have been unjustly imprisoned. I refuse to be set at liberty by favor of Winder. I demand a trial.

Expostulation and entreaty had no effect with Farin. He would stay in the clean record or not at all.

PROSPECT OF RELEASE BY CHANGE OF PRISONERS . . .

It was while his trial was pending that I received the welcome intelligence that Mr. G—— had been successful. I was to procure in exchange the release of one White, a citizen of Richmond who had been captured on a blockade runner. I was to be sent to the front with the next party released for exchange, and they were to start on the following morning. I could not realize this joyful news. For the first time since my capture I was unmanned. Burying my face in my hands I hurried to my quarters and let the hot tears come.

When the morning came, I stood at the door and watched the file of men who came out from Libby, and down the street on their way to the landing—a ragged, shiftless crowd of men they were who danced with glee as they moved along. But they did not halt at our gate. They passed by, they disappeared behind the buildings in the distance. I was left behind! Was I to be cheated of my liberty after all? Had I been purposely deceived? A great despair filled my heart.

Some one touched me on the shoulder. I turned and saw Farin.

"They have left you behind."

"Heaven help me!—yes."

"Do not be discouraged, you can go with the next party."

"How do you know that?"

"From an officer who was just here from Libby. I asked about your affair. You will be required to go up to Libby to sign some papers relative to their exchange. Let me warn you not to be surprised by any of the [illegible] at Libby."

"What do you mean?"

"By this time we had arrived at my old quarters, and had sat down on the edge of the tobacco press, and out of earshot of others.

"I see that I am sure your name is not Peters."

A cold [illegible] started from every pore of my body; my tongue rolled [illegible] in my mouth. I could not utter a word.

FARIN PROVES FRIEND IN NEED . . .

"Do not be alarmed. I do not [illegible] know who you are, but I have faith in your honor. You are at liberty where you are. Be perfectly calm and listen well to what I say. I am in the service of Mr. Seward. I have a quantity of [illegible] information of prisoners taken. He knows that I have never been mistaken. I have never failed him. If Winder had not stopped me the other morning, I should have carried him a lot of news which would have given the government a chance to have [illegible] the rebel army in forty-eight hours. I got it from young Lee that night of the party; but it is too late now. You will go to Washington."

"Yes."

"See Mr. Seward. Tell him that I am out of money. If he will send me [illegible] here I must have at least $1,000 in gold. He knows that I can do twice such a [illegible] that amount. If he cannot, he can send a letter, but rather than [illegible] what signing your name with the letter A—below the line. If it is shown, I will understand Mr. Seward is unable or [illegible]. Will you do this?"

I gave my promise, withheld at this astounding revelation that I could only answer mechanically, "I will."

"We have been too long together. I'll leave you now. If there is an opportunity I shall speak to you again. If not, good-by. We will wait each other in the north one of these days, or"—and he smiled calmly "in heaven."

And Farin sauntered away down the long room, talking and jesting with the prisoners as if he had not confided a secret to me which whispered in the ears of Winder would have cost him his life. I gazed upon his retreating form with [illegible] bewilderment. I could not at once take into my astonished brain the fact that this man, who for three years had been the friend and confidant of rebel generals, the companion of rebel statesmen, the pet of the Richmond salon, this accomplished scholar this brave ideal of a gentleman was a spy! For a moment I was [illegible] in admiration of his [illegible] audacity his genius. The sublime daring of his venture overshadowed its dishonor. There was a grandeur in this playing with death not unlike that with which Milton has invested the Fallen Angel. We shrink from the fact, we admire the genius which conceives and dares to execute.

Not for an instant did I question the truth of Farin's words. The man who uttered them was not the gay careless flaneur of society who received so graciously the courtesies of gentlemen and ladies who had visited him the day before. It was a wide [illegible] absolute [illegible] complete. It was another creature with another tongue—it was tipped with steel, another heart—if he had any heart, another brain, and that seemed alive with fire. I could not believe it, yet I knew Farin was a spy. But who was Farin?

When the guard came for me to go to Libby, I was not surprised, nor did I fail to [illegible] the caution of Farin. While I was signing the paper, which was another [illegible] to retard me and [illegible] my prison if I did not procure the release of White, I kept my face clear to the table and [illegible] with a slight fit of coughing, which furnished an excuse for holding a handkerchief to my face until I reached the sheet. I doubt if I have recognized my own father had I met him that afternoon.

A MOMENT OF UNUTTERABLE DESPAIR . . .

During the event as I took a complete list of all the prisoners who were either in our service or were citizens. Many of them wrote short letters for their friends. Some I placed in the lining of my pants, behind the knee which is safer than any other place of concealment.

At [illegible] as I was at my post watching for the exit of the party I was told were to go to City Point that morning. I had seen nothing of Farin since the afternoon before when I went in Libby. His trial had [illegible] off that afternoon but he had not returned to Castle Thunder during the night. Shall I ever see him again? I thought. How long will he be able to play this double game? What are his motives? Surely, not those of gain. For he demanded none.

The gate was open and the ex-[illegible] prisoners approached. There was quite a party of them this morning. As they came near I ran to the door and attempted to pass the guard, so certain was I of my liberty—but I found his bayonet at my breast.

"Halt! you can't go out there."

But I am exchanged. I am on the list to go with the party which is coming down the street. There they are passing and I shall be left behind."

And I pushed savagely against the sharp steel resting lightly to the strikes of the guard in charge of the squad of prisoners.

"Officer, here I am to go with you."

The fellow turned his head but the parts of [illegible] pushed on as if fearing that some new delay might arise [illegible] the torture of confinement from which they had just emerged. It was a selfish impulse but even then with the blood rushing to my eyes and nostrils in the agony of despair I did not blame them. With blinded vision I could hardly see them nor did I notice two horsemen who were riding up the street and reined in their steeds near the party, but my ear caught the sound of Farin's voice clear and [illegible]. It was the tone of command.

"Again is there not the name of Peters in your list of exchanged prisoners—a man to be taken [illegible] order?"

The officer whom he addressed without speaking stared at Farin's civilian clothes and then in the face of the other horseman who was in the uniform of a general officer, and broke out impatiently:

"D—n it, why don't you answer?"

"I didn't know who he was, sir."

And the man fumbled in his pocket, found the paper and was about to open it, when Farin reached forth his hand, wrested it from the officer's [illegible] his eye over the list returning it with his finger on the place where my name was written.

"That's the man, captain. You had better go and get him."

If the commander in chief of the rebel army had uttered these words he could not have been more deliberate, more authoritative than this aid, who a few hours before was my fellow prisoner in Castle Thunder.

As I took my place in the file, Farin nodded familiarly to me, saying to his companion as they rode away:

"I knew that poor fellow was down for exchange, and determined he should not be cheated of his liberty."

ONCE MORE FREE BENEATH OLD GLORY . . .

In a few hours from that moment I once more stood under the protecting folds of our dear old flag never so beautiful, so sacred, as then. At Fortress Monroe I reported to our commissioner of exchange, telling him my real name and story.

"Go at once to Washington," he said, "until the exchange is entirely effected. Go at once to Washington, but keep clear of Baltimore by your friends. You will get [illegible] the government at the [illegible]."

The instant I arrived in Washington, the utmost power of the [illegible] at my disposal and in three days, this Mr. Stanton desired to accomplish an object he did it. But the man White was not to be found. Telegrams were sent to every place where [illegible] of state were confined, but the name of White was not among them. Three days elapsed, when it was discovered that White, a few weeks before had been set at liberty. I at once hurried back to Fortress Monroe to plead to deliver myself up to the rebel authorities, but our government was not [illegible] to what he had done.

The facts of [illegible] were made known to Colonel [illegible], another oath was given, and on the day my time was up I had my papers of discharge. I was free from every obligation to my late captors. With the news of Peters I should off that terrible night [illegible] of suspense. I make as it were [illegible] a horrible dream, where I had been [illegible] a part, while I had been a helpless actor to my own personality, a painful, thankful, happy sensation was it when I was free, when I could [illegible] myself again.

When the General finished [illegible] statements, we read me see [illegible] leaf in the memory of [illegible]. We [illegible] side in his life, while I [illegible] thrall and [illegible] the [illegible] tion which held me spellbound by fascination which grew, in part out of the dramatic interest of the [illegible]. The silence of the night hour may have had [illegible] thing to do with it, while it was due in a measure to the [illegible] tones of the speaker, who, at [illegible] seemed to be passing through the [illegible] he was [illegible] ing.

FARIN'S IDENTITY WAS NEVER REVEALED . . .

And what became of Farin?" said I, finally breaking the silence.

"Oh, yes, I [illegible] as one of his most valuable agents but at that [illegible] the secret service fund of the state department was so much depleted that the amount demanded by Farin could not be expended. The matter was deemed of so much importance however that it was taken to the war office, but Halleck objected, and I was obliged to write to the spy a letter wherein I told him of my safe arrival at my home signing the last letter of my name above the line.

"He has told me since—for he came to my camp one day near the end of the war—that Winder [illegible] every [illegible] but that of force to make him leave the Confederacy. But Farin stayed in Richmond in spite of Winder until one day he was taken by a guard and absolutely put outside the lines. What has become of this man I do not know. I do not to this day know his real name where he is [illegible] nor if he is alive today.

"I had the [illegible] however, to obtain by exchange the freedom of nearly all the prisoners who were confined in Castle Thunder upon suspicion of their sympathy with the Union cause."

"Did you ever hear from Roberts?"

Oh, yes. I found him after I came back. By the way did you notice the negro girl who was with the children this afternoon?"

"Yes, I did, and now I think of it, she addressed you as 'Yes sir, Captain.'"

That was [illegible] who tried to save me from capture. She can't call me by any other name than Mass'r Captain."

"Your capture and imprisonment had its compensation then."

"Decidedly," replied the General. "But I was careful during the remainder of the war not again to be caught outside the Union lines in disguise."

The story of the adventure of my comrade the General, is an exceptional one even in the history of a war like that of ours which is so full of incident and romance. Its hero is alive, and honorably and [illegible] is known today.

THE ROLES OF THE STATES

The sturdy oak and clinging vine
Are shown on any [illegible] maps;
The sturdy oak just keeps his seat
The clinging vine [illegible] on the strap.

I set me down and thought profound
This maxim wise I did [illegible]
It's easier far to be a [illegible]
Than make a girl like you.

METHOD OF HANDLING NEWS OF WASHINGTON

NEWSWRITERS' ORGANIZATION MAKES IT EASY.

Haskin Gives Inside Information on Tricks of Newspaper Men in Capital City.

By Frederic J. Haskin.

For years one of the recognized needs in Washington has been a Press club that would be in keeping with the dignity and importance of the part taken by the newspaper men in the affairs of the nation. The National Press club, in reality the organization of newspaper writers of the United States, has been formed to fill this requirement. Although it is not quite a year old, the new club has over 300 members, including the Washington representatives of nearly all the important newspapers in America. The nonresident membership is rapidly filling with writers from all parts of the country, and the roster will soon include the most imposing array of writing talent ever assembled together in any one organization. Larger quarters will be occupied in a few days, and among the notables who will attend the opening will be both the President and the vice president of the United States.

Is Not Rival to Gridiron Club.

The National Press club is in no sense a rival of the Gridiron club, that most famous of all dining organizations. The majority of the Gridiron men are also on the roster of the National. The Gridiron had its birth in the mind of Major John M. Carson, for many years dean of the corps of Washington correspondents, but now chief of the Bureau of Manufactures of the Census office. During the last twenty years the Gridiron club has entertained more famous people than any other dining club in the world's history. Every year scores of the most noted men in the country travel from all parts of the United States to Washington to attend its unique functions.

There is no other city whose daily news is one-tenth as important to the nation at large as that of the capital, and the Washington date line appears more often than any other in the average American newspaper. Aside from subjects of general concern, there are always matters of acute local interest originating there. Consequently, it becomes as important for each leading newspaper to have its own Washington correspondent as it is to have good reporters at home. The men who serve in Washington are usually those who have proved their mettle in the home office before being sent to the capital. They know the workings of all the branches of the government, and soon prove themselves worthy to be trusted with all sorts of confidences. In his farewell address to the newspaper men Mr. Roosevelt stated that among them he had many as capable advisers as he could find anywhere inside or out of the government service. The appointments which came unsolicited to Washington correspondents proves that this statement was not one of the insincere hyperboles that sometimes accompany farewell messages.

Unique Organization.

The corps of Washington correspondents is one of the most unique organizations in the country. At the beginning of each Congress the newspaper men meet and organize, electing a standing committee of five, who are their representatives in all business matters in which the members of the fraternity are collectively interested. Co-operating with the speaker of the House and the committee on rules of the Senate, they have jurisdiction over the press galleries of the Senate and House. They pass upon the credentials of all who apply for the privileges of the press galleries, and it is their duty to see that only bona fide newspaper men are admitted. It is easier to get through the proverbial eye of the needle than past that standing committee, unless one is entitled to the privilege.

The amount of copy handled out of Washington every day is astonishing. The two telegraph companies daily transmit about 125,000 words of press association matter, whose combined daily output amounts to about 350,000 words. Each association has its own leased wires, its own operators, and its own distributing facilities. Then there are some twenty big newspapers which have their own leased wires, and they promptly bring the total amount of daily press business leaving the city of Washington up to the tremendous total of 360,000 words.

Wires Taxed to Utmost.

The occasion of the second inauguration of Grover Cleveland is said to have been the record breaking time in the history of telegraphy for the number of words sent out from a single city in one day. It is estimated that the total ran up to a half million words. The time of the Spanish-American war was another period when the telegraphic facilities of Washington were taxed to the utmost. It was not an unusual thing for a single paper to have a ten or fifteen thousand word message filed.

The greatest performance at the telegraph key in the whole history of the business occurred at the time of McKinley's annual message to Congress in the fall of 1900. It was then the custom to release the message by wire instead of mailing it out as is now done. The Associated Press was given the document on Sunday afternoon. It contained 25,000 words. W. L. Waugh and Ernest W. Emery, both of whom are still with the Associated Press, although no longer at the key, transmitted the entire message in five and a half hours, which was at the rate of 2,090 words an hour per man. For a sustained speed nothing equal to this has ever been done.

General conditions of newspaper work at the capital have changed vastly in the past twenty-five years. In the olden days each correspondent had to cover practically the entire field of general news and local matters, since there was no press association to handle the routine stuff. Today this burden is taken from the shoulders of the correspondents, and they are left free to handle the news of local value and to comment on and interpret that of general interest. Serving hundreds of papers representing all shades of political belief and all degrees of journalistic propriety, the press association has to content itself with the bare, bald statement of fact.

No Conflict of Interest.

There is no conflict of interest between the correspondent and the press association. After all, it is the inside details, the analysis of motives and the sidelights which make the best story, and to the press association this is forbidden ground. Furthermore, the people of the Seventh Virginia district are more interested in knowing what their representative is doing than what the President himself is having in mind. The appropriation of a half million dollars for the construction of a postoffice at Atlanta is of more interest to the people of that city, than the appropriation of a hundred million dollars for the United States army.

Here is where the Washington correspondent finds his useful field. Furthermore, it is remarkable how much political news of a local interest centers in Washington. Right now the patronage question is uppermost. Which is the dominant faction in the home state? Who shall have the say in awarding the offices at home? Who is to be postmaster at Podunk, and what is the significance of his selection? Is not the selection of a United States marshall for the eastern district of Kentucky of more interest to Kentuckians than the appointment of an ambassador to the Court of St. James? State politics is made and unmade more in Washington than at home. Senator So-and-So is the king-pin of his party back home. His lieutenants come here to confer with him about every move. It requires a local man, one who knows the situation at home, one who can put the two and two of politics together and make four out of it. These things are of more frequent occurrence now than ever before, and the Washington correspondent more essential than ever.

Ample Provision for Correspondent.

The government makes ample provision for the Washington correspondent. Realizing that the safety of the nation lies in having all the people know what is transpiring at the capital, and that the correspondents are the best interpreters of these happenings, every facility is afforded them to get the news. Each important bureau mails them information about its doings. Each department has a press room where the correspondents are furnished with a base of operations and facilities for handling the news they get during their rounds. The White House has a press room where all the local papers and each of the press associations station a representative during the business day, and which is headquarters for all the newspaper men when they look in at the White House. The President often calls in the whole corps of correspondents and tells them of the things he has on his mind.

The officials of the government have long since maintained confidential relations with the newspaper men of the national capital, freely discussing with even the things which cannot be printed. One of the best illustrations of the relation that exists between them and the newspaper men happened when President Roosevelt decided to appoint one of their number, "Bob" Wynne, first assistant postmaster general. He was sent for by the President, and informed of the decision. He was then asked how the appointment could be kept out of the newspapers until it was desired to make the announcement. Wynne instantly replied that the best way was to tell every newspaper man in Washington, coupled with the information that the story was not to be released until a given date. His suggestion was acted upon, and the secret was safe.

It does not take the Washington correspondent long to understand what is going to happen even if he is not told in so many words. When the rate bill was pending in the Senate the information leaked out that Senator Aldrich was going to leave for Europe on a certain steamer. That was all the correspondents had to be told. They knew at once that he had the situation on the rate bill in hand, and that the real fight was over, although it might take a month for the smoke of battle to clear away.

S.S.S. CURES CATARRH

During the warm Summer months Catarrh sufferers are not troubled with the effects of the disease, as in Winter. This is true because in the heated season every pore and outlet of the skin is open, and a constant, copious evaporation carries off with it a large percentage of the impurities and poisons which produce Catarrh. But at the first sign of cooler weather the sufferer's comfort ends; the skin does not secrete as freely, a congested condition of the system takes place, and soon every miserable symptom of Catarrh is harassing and causing discomfort to the unfortunate ones.

Catarrh is a deep-seated blood disease, one which no amount of local treatment will ever reach and permanently cure. The beneficial effects of washes, sprays, inhalations, lotions, etc., are only temporary, and when left off the old condition returns, because the blood is infected with catarrhal matter and impurities. This inflames and irritates the mucous membrane and tissues and produces the symptoms of ringing noises in the head and ears, mucus in the throat, headaches, watery eyes, partial deafness, sore throat, general impairment of the health, etc.

To cure Catarrh permanently the blood must be purified, and the system cleansed of all morbid matters, and at the same time strengthened and built up. Nothing equals S. S. S. for this purpose. It attacks the disease at its very bottom of the trouble in the blood, and makes a permanent and lasting cure. S. S. S. removes every particle of the catarrhal matter from the circulation, making this vital fluid pure, fresh and healthy. Then the inflamed membranes begin to heal, because they are nourished with pure, health-giving blood, the head is cleared, mucus stops dropping back into the throat, every symptom disappears, the constitution is built up and health restored. S. S. S. is the greatest of all blood purifiers and cures Catarrh by driving out the cause from the system. Being made entirely of healthful vegetable ingredients S. S. S. does not contain any habit forming drugs, which really do not cure Catarrh but often ruin the health; nor will S. S. S. injure the most delicate system. Book on Catarrh and any medical advice free to all who write.

In the past few years Mrs. Miller has given $50,000.00 in sending medicine to afflicted women.

Several years ago Mrs. Miller learned of a mild and simple preparation that cured herself and several friends of female weakness and piles. She was besieged by so many women needing treatment that she decided to furnish it to those who might call for it. She started with only a few dollars capital, and the remedy, possessing true and wonderful merit, producing many cures when doctors and other remedies failed, the demand grew so rapidly she was several times compelled to seek larger quarters. She now occupies one of the city's largest office buildings, which she owns, and almost one hundred lady clerks and stenographers are required to assist in this great business.

Some time ago it was announced that she would give to women who suffered from female diseases another $10,000.00 worth of her medicine. She has fulfilled this promise, but as she is still receiving requests from thousands upon thousands of women from all parts of the world, who have not yet used her remedy she has decided to give away $50,000.00 more to those who are suffering and unable to find relief.

Mrs. Miller's wonderful remedy is especially prepared for the speedy and permanent cure of leucorrhea or whitish discharges, ulceration, displacements or falling of the womb, profuse, scanty or painful periods, uterine or ovarian tumors or growths; also pains in the head, back and bowels, bearing down feelings, nervousness, creeping feeling up the spine, melancholy, desire to cry, hot flashes, weariness and piles from any cause or no matter of how long standing.

Every woman suffering, unable to find relief, who will write Mrs. Miller now, without delay, will receive by mail free of charge, a 50-cent box of her simple home remedy, also her book with explanatory illustrations, showing why women suffer and how they can easily cure themselves at home without the aid of a physician.

All that is necessary is to cut out the coupon at the bottom of this page, fill in your name and address and send it to Mrs. Miller, Kokomo, Ind. The medicine and book will be sent to you at once. Send now before the $50,000.00 worth is all gone.

How to Cure Any Case of Piles

I want to tell you flatly and plainly that any woman, or man either, for that matter, who suffers from any form of piles, may place their faith absolutely in my treatment. They won't be disappointed. It's intended for piles as well as the diseases peculiar to women. It heals diseased membrane surfaces, no matter where located, and I verily believe this remedy has cured more bad cases of piles of all kinds than all the so-called "pile cures" and doctors in the country. A cure with my remedy is speedy. It's safe and it's lasting. The intense torture, the burning, smarting and itching stop at once, and you feel better right from the start. Send for my free treatment at once and see for yourself.

Why Men Desert Their Wives

Eighty Per Cent of the Wife Desertions and Divorce Due to Female Weakness.

I should have taken better care of myself, I suppose. I was sick and suffering. No one but a woman can ever know how I suffered. I was irritable. I couldn't be to my husband the wife that I ought to have been. He, being a man, couldn't understand. We drifted apart. He sought his pleasures elsewhere. Finally there was nothing but the divorce court that could settle our differences.

That is the sad story that eight out of every ten million who have passed through the ordeal of the divorce court as well as the countless thousands of deserted wives who are not divorced, know deep down in her heart was the real cause of her trouble.

A sick wife, a neglected home, and the publicity and disgrace of the court room to end it all. There wouldn't be half so much talk of the divorce evil in the world if only every wife and mother would realize her duty to preserve her health and strength.

No woman has the right to expect her husband to devote his leisure hours to his home and her when she is dragging a dragged-out, hopeless, down-in-the-mouth existence that would discourage the greatest optimist on earth.

Mrs. Cora B. Miller's marvelous home remedy has done more to prevent divorce than all the messages to congress and conventions in the world. The woman who is bright and cheerful and well has a home that reflects her own good feeling and discontent finds no place therein.

Mrs. Miller's aid and advice is as free to you as God's sunshine or the air you breathe. She wants to prove to you her common-sense home treatment will cure you just as surely as it cured her years ago in her humble cottage.

If you are a sufferer from any female trouble, no matter what it is, send the coupon below to Mrs. Cora B. Miller at once.

Put Your Faith In Mrs. Miller

My word that my home treatment should unfailingly relieve you of female diseases or piles doesn't necessarily mean anything. But when my word and medicine is backed up by over a million ladies, that's evidence you cannot doubt. There is hardly a county or small village in the land that does not number some poor sufferer cured. I didn't force them to use my medicine. They took it of their own free will and it cured them. You can put your faith in that sort of a remedy every time. Just cut out the coupon, send it today and prove what this marvelous treatment will do for you.

This Noted Divine Says:

"I am personally acquainted with Mrs. Cora B. Miller. I most cheerfully and voluntarily testify that myself and family have been greatly benefited by the use of Mrs. Miller's home remedies and heartily recommend them to the general public."—Rev. P. G. Roscamp, D. D., Presbyterian Minister.

Do not delay. Send the coupon today.

WOMAN A WIRELESS CHIEF.

She Takes Charge of Station on Roof of Waldorf-Astoria.

From the New York Press.

Anna E. Nevins, 22 years old, Sunday took active charge of the station of the United Wireless Telegraph company on the roof of the Waldorf-Astoria hotel. She holds the distinction of being the only woman wireless operator in the world, and she is believed to be one of the most skilful in the service of the company by which she is employed.

The young woman will be on duty regularly every day for eight hours. She has been assigned to the busiest period of the day, and at present her chief work will be to keep in touch with vessels plying between this port and southern points. Many wireless messages are sent out by passengers on those vessels, the majority of whom are bound south for the Florida season or else to Cuba or other parts of the West Indies.

Miss Nevins, it was told, flashes messages through the air to her sweetheart, who is the wireless operator aboard the steamship Oceana, of the Hamburg-American line. She has picked up the Oceana at 1,000 miles, the record for the Waldorf-Astoria sending station. She has several times flashed messages to her sweetheart at that distance, and has carried on a lengthy verbal conversation with him at a distance of 500 miles. This is believed to be the record in long-distance talks in which Cupid has had a hand.

The young woman operator wears the uniform and coat of the service. She has altered the lines of the coat, giving it a tailor-made cut, while preserving its strictly service appearance. The cap also has been slightly altered, giving it a smarter look, and it also differs from the regular cap of the company in that it is held in place by a hatpin. Miss Nevins is an expert in wireless instruments, and was selected for the post partly by reason of her practical knowledge of the system she operates.

—Sheet steel is now much in vogue for motor bodies. If the panels of sheet steel are properly made, they will add much to the strength of the whole, although it may be true that a sheet of steel, unsupported, has but little stiffness. It is the flanging and the curvature that adds the strength, and it is almost no cost, nor does the weight increase materially.

An automobile endurance run from Los Angeles to Portland, Ore., is being arranged by the automobile dealers and motor enthusiasts of Los Angeles. The event, according to present plans, is to take place during the Alaskan exhibition at Seattle, and will be one of the longest ever held in this country. The proposed tour, covering, if it will, the whole length of the Pacific coast, will prove one of the most strenuous and difficult ever held for motor cars. The 2,000 miles of the course will cover the roughest mountain roads of the country, besides affording the contestants the chance of testing their machines over the famous Mojave desert and San Joaquin Valley roads.

That earthworms as well as squirrels may aid the forester is the novel suggestion of an American naturalist. Dry maple seeds are drawn into worm burrows, where they sprout, and it is believed that some of them must survive in favorably moist seasons.

BEFORE THE CURTAIN

JOHN BARRYMORE.
Matinee Idol, Who Recently Opened His New York Season in "A Stubborn Cinderella."

THE appearance in Denver last Tuesday evening of Mischa Elman, violinist, was the most notable event of the winter musical season, and it is doubtful if there will be anything else this spring that will anywhere near equal its artistic value. Elman has created a veritable sensation everywhere he has been heard but newspaper reports failed to credit him for his true worth. Glowing as the accounts were, one could not but feel that they were either over enthusiastic or else were swayed by the magnetism rather than the merit of the player. But when this young artist played before the largest audience of the season, (save only expected he proved his worth. He is a finished artist, to be ranked with and judged according to the standards set by Ysaye Kreisler Kubelik and the like. So great has Elman's Denver success been, that arrangements have been made for another concert by him in that city April 16 when the marvelous player is on his way to the coast, where he gives a series of concerts and then leaves for his Australian tour.

Elman presents programs of great technical difficulty and of range that would tax the power of any other violinist before the public. He is young, only 19 they say, full of fire and enthusiasm. If at the age of 19 he is capable of such things what may he not be in 10 years time?

The opera season at the Broadway theater, Denver last week by the Lambardi troupe did not prove the tremendous success its promoters had expected it would. While its principals were evidently gifted with beautiful voices and some histrionic ability the chorus was extremely weak, the productions with a few exceptions poor and the orchestra uncertain. "Aida" proved the greatest disappointment but the work grew better as the week passed. "Rigoletto" on Thursday evening proved the best of the entire repertoire.

The Broadway will be dark for two weeks, after which Alla Nazimova the Russian interpreter of Ibsan will come for a week of gloomy plays. Then follow the Ben Greet Players and the Russian Symphony orchestra in "A Midsummer Night's Dream." Prospects for the spring season are not particularly bright, which means that the local booking will be light.

The present week brings Margaret Fealy, the energetic and capable actress of Denver to the Opera House for six performances. It is decidedly the best repertoire engagement of the season for it is unusual that plays of the class Mrs. Fealy offers are seen at popular prices. The Majestic has another good bill and business at that house seems to be on the increase, as it deserves.

Austin Strong while in London, paid a visit to J. M. Barrie. On his way he passed through Kensington Gardens, where Peter Pan' happened. As Mr Barrie greeted him Mr Strong said:

Mr Barrie on my way here I met a duck. He was swimming around the pond. I spoke to him and said: Do you know Wendy? He said: I never heard of Wendy. I said: Do you know Hook, the Pirate? He said: I never heard of Hook, the Pirate. I went through the whole category of Peter Pan' worthies and that duck does not know one of them.

Mr. Barrie listened with eyes wide open and innocent gravity. When Strong had finished he inquired: 'Was it the duck with a red bill?'

What Press Agents Say

MARGARET FEALY THIS WEEK

Margaret Fealy and her associate players come to the Opera House for six performances this week commencing with a matinee. This engagement promises to be the most successful popular-priced attraction of the season. The plays to be given are all of the best class and have scored metropolitan successes. Mrs. Fealy has made elaborate preparations, and her company contains several well known and popular players who have been with such companies as the Julia Marlowe, May Robson and the Bellows stock company.

The repertoire, as it has been arranged, follows: The engagement opens with a special St. Patrick's matinee, Wednesday afternoon at 2 o'clock, when David Belasco's noted success "The Charity Ball," will be given. This same play will be repeated Wednesday evening. On Thursday and Friday evenings Mrs. Fealy and her company will be seen in a grand double bill. Jane' a drama in one act written especially for Mrs. Fealy by Marion Short and Paul... Phelps authors of David Warfield's success, "The Grand Army Man." This play is entitled "Witches' Night and Candle Light." On Saturday's "Little Lord Fauntleroy" will be given as a special matinee attraction for children.

Seats for the evening performances will be reserved at the box office Monday morning.

"A KNIGHT FOR A DAY" AT ORPHEUM

The patronage given "A Knight for a Day" during its week's engagement at Chicago and its long run at Wallack's, New York, is indicative that no matter what the condition of the money market the popular taste for musical comedy will be satisfied. In other words, a hit is a hit. There have not been many of them this season, but the lack in numbers is made up in enthusiasm, and this New York success has certainly received its generous share of prosperity. It is chief among the several big hits, and has been a record breaker, filling the two theaters in the two largest cities in the land continuously throughout its engagement, and moreover they have sold out the capacities weeks and even months in advance. New York and Chicago are only a criterion in proportion to their size, and it is certain this newest musical furore will enjoy the same substantial patronage in all the other cities in the proportion.

What the people like, and what is the best given them are not always identical or analogous, but as our amusements are enterprises for profit rather than education, the effort is naturally to give them what they will pay for in a substantial manner all of course, within the polite laws of reason and adaptability. It is the wise managerial producer who gives value received in his program that will ever win with the amusement public, for attractions of a more or less stereotyped or imitational character are now the ones to suffer from theatergoers' ennui.

BEN GREET-RUSSIAN SYMPHONY

Performances almost operatic in nature are announced for April 5 when the Russian Symphony orchestra and the Ben Greet players will appear together in a dramatic and musical rendering of "A Midsummer Night's Dream," with the Mendelssohn music at the Opera House, giving two performances.

One hundred people are concerned in the representation of which special features will be the full opera of the musical portion. Such a performance will call for a symphony orchestra for the music, and will be attempted before only in the Greek Amphitheater in the Greek dances and Elsie Clark Kalloch soprano.

Ben Greet will play Bottom, considered one of his best parts, and Miss Irene Rooke, a young actress will appear as Hermia. Others in the company are Violet Vivian, Beatrice Mills, J. Sayer Crawley, Le Gal Robinson, Frederick Powell and George Vivian.

The play will not be given in the Elizabethan manner but rather in the style in which it is given in Ben Greet in his open air plays. To this end a most unique stage setting has been designed and executed by Troy and Marcella Kinley, well known mural painters.

ANOTHER EXCELLENT BILL AT THE MAJESTIC THIS WEEK

Following two of the best bills of refined and novel vaudeville that have ever been presented to the people of this city, Manager DeWitt C. Webber has provided another week of entertainment for the patrons of the Majestic that will maintain in every way the high standard of excellence which is a credit with the owners and manager of this cosy theater.

Tom Linton and his company of eight beautiful and clever young ladies known as the Jungle Girls, will present a unique musical comedy based upon the things that happen to Veries Hope, a missionary in darkest Africa, who is thoroughly in touch with the up-to-date methods of making converts. What happens to Hope and what the dusky belles of the wilds of big game do to make life pleasant for him is all novel and entertaining and will give the laughers a good opportunity to satisfy their desires to the fullest need. The characters in the quaint, and ... Veries Hope ... Tom Linton Lalla Palooza, queen of the Cannibal Isles ... Miss Wisters.

The Jungle Girls: Miss Minnie Robinson, Miss Gladys Francis, Quimbo Miss Cho Moyne, Poko Miss Ida Tasker, Soko Miss Georgie Marches, Gumbo Miss Belle Hathaway.

W. J. Holmes and Julia Hollister present a rural sketch called "Looking for Betsy," which gives Mr. Holmes an opportunity to show his fine talents as a character performer and Miss Hollister a chance to exhibit her fascinating stage qualities. Mr. Holmes's lifelike imitation of James A. Heme in the lighthouse scene in "Shore Acres" is said to be perfection and brings back pleasant memories of the lamented actor.

Kikuda a Japanese juggler from the flowers kingdom performs many sensational feats and press reports from other cities where he has appeared in this country pronounce his act a remarkable one.

The Swickards, fresh from the big vaudeville circuits of the east, will be heard in operatic selections, interspersed with catchy comedy. They are both singers and performers of the first rank and are always entertaining.

Carlie McMannus, the dainty young lady whose voice is always sweet and agreeable will sing "Kiss Me, Dearie," as her feature song this week.

Another set of brand new pictures for the Majestiscope will be presented. These films are right out of the studio and are not marred by the defects which make many motion pictures really injurious to the eyesight. The scintillation of piercing light so common in many films are absent in those presented at the Majestic. The subjects are also of the very latest.

The coming week promises to see the many improvements which are in progress at this theater nearer completion. Already the public have shown appreciation of the efforts of Messrs. Webber and Talbot to please the ... patronage. The matinee performances are becoming very popular with the ladies.

Plays and Players

Grace George began her New York run in "A Woman's Way" last week.

Joseph and William Jefferson, who were seen here a short time ago in Sheridan's "The Rivals," expect to revive "The Henrietta" next year.

Mary Mannering's supporting company in her new play "Step by Step" by Langdon Mitchell, includes Helen Macbeth, Addison Pitt and Frank Sylvester.

Zangwill has made a great success with his new play "The Melting Pot." According to Chicago papers Walker Whiteside and Crystal Hearne are appearing in the piece, and already it has scored a long run in the Windy city.

The cast of "The Sins of Society" will include Dorothy Donnelly, Louise Closser Hale, Louise Carter, Bijou Fernandez, W. L. Abington, ... Wesson and others ... The first production will be made in Chicago shortly.

Klaw and Erlanger will present Theodore Roberts and Guy Standing in a new play next season. The roles which the two men will play are said to be widely different from their present parts in "The Right of Way." It is also reported that these two fine actors will be seen shortly in an elaborate revival of "Othello."

The Shuberts have purchased an interest in William Faversham's enterprises, but Faversham will continue to manage and direct his own tour and productions as heretofore. Mr. Faversham is now on the road appearing with great success in Nirdlinger's "Lost World and His Wife."

Lillian Russell, who is starring this season in "Wildfire," began her tour of the Pacific coast last week in Denver. In order to reach Denver in time to open Miss Russell ran a special train from Chicago where she appeared the previous week. Her season lasts until the middle of June. Next season Miss Russell will be seen in ... new play by Edmund Day, author of "The Round Up," called "The Widow's Mite." In this play Miss Russell plays the part of a widow who thinks she is rich but is not and is supported by three friends of her former husband. An Australian tour is being planned for Miss Russell season after next which she will appear in her three plays, "The Butterfly," "Wildfire" and "The Widow's Mite."

John Barrymore, whose success "A Stubborn Cinderella" is marked, is to be featured by Charles Dillingham in a new musical comedy called "The Candy Shop" by George V. Hobart and John L. Golden. Associated with Mr. Barrymore will be William Rock, Maude Fulton, Bliss Milford and Frank Lalor of "Coming Thro' the Rye" fame.

Jules Murry has secured the rights and the Mansfield production of "Beau Brummel" for the use of Norman Hackett. Murry's latest addition to his stellar ranks. Mr. Hackett [illegible] a prominent member of Louis James' company is being featured this season in "Cavemates." Robert Edeson's play of last season.

Louis James, supported by his wife, Aphie James and several other players of note, will probably revive "A School for Scandal" next season. Mr. James has been most successful in previous seasons in Sheridan's comedy, and he is anxious to play Sir Peter again. His tour this season in Ibsen's "Peer Gynt" has been satisfactory from all points of view according to reports.

Raymond Hitchcock's new musical play in which he will be starred this spring by Cohan and Harris will be written by George M. Cohan. At present Mr. Hitchcock is appearing in the Cohan and Harris Minstrel troupe with much success. The new play will be named "The Chorus Man," in contrast to "The Chorus Lady."

Arnold Daly's season in "The Strong People" once called "The Pickpockets" came to an end last week. The company has been disbanded. Burns "Mantle of the Chicago Tribune remarks that if such a play as "The White Sister," in which Viola Allen is starring, succeeds and the public allows "The Strong People" to fail, the people cannot have much discrimination.

There is a possibility that Rida Johnson Young's play "Glorious Betsy" in which Mary Mannering appeared in this city last season will be produced in Paris soon. This comedy deals with an incident in French history and while the author has changed the [illegible] to make her play, it is thought by Parisian managers that it will appeal to French audiences.

Mrs. Leslie Carter, who is appearing in New York city at the present time in her new play by John [illegible] Long, says that some one is trying to interfere with her career in this play, and intimates that David Belasco is at the bottom of the movement. A representative of the Belasco office says that Mrs. Carter's statement is absolutely untrue, and that Belasco is not trying to interfere with Mrs. Carter's career in any way.

Billie Burke, who is appearing this season in [illegible] under the direction of Charles [illegible], was unable to fill her engagement in Boston a few weeks ago on account of illness. She telegraphed her manager as follows:

"I feel most terribly at the inconvenience I am causing but I fear I must rest for another week. BILLIE BURKE."

To which Charles Frohman replied:

"That's all right. There are thousands of other weeks but only one Billie Burke."

"CHARLES FROHMAN."

The past week in New York offered the following list of attractions to the theatergoers: David Warfield in "The Music Master," William Hodge in "The Man from Home," Blanche Bates in "The Fighting Hope," Thomas Wise and Douglas Fairbanks in "A Gentleman from Mississippi," John Barrymore in "A Stubborn Cinderella," James T. Powers in "Havana," "The Queen of Moulin Rouge," William Gillette in "Samson," Julia Marlowe in "The Goddess of Reason," Maude Adams in "What Every Woman Knows," William McIntyre in "The Traveling Salesman," Henry E. Dixey in "Mary Jane's Pa," William Collier in "The Patriot," Otis Skinner in "The Honor of the Family," Benjamin Chapin in "Honest Abe," and Arnold Breese in "The Third Degree," Elsie Janis in "The Fair Co-Ed," Mrs. Leslie Carter in "Kassa," Eleanor Robson in "The Dawn of a Tomorrow," Maxine Elliott in "The Chaperone," Anna Held in "Miss Innocence," Wilton Lackaye in "The Battle," Frances Starr in "The Easiest Way," Fannie Ward in "The New Lady Bantock," "The Girl from Rectors" and Sam Bernard in "Nearly a Hero." What other city offers such an array of stars and plays?

SELF-STARTING DEVICES FOR MOTOR-BOATS

From the Boston Transcript.

Among the exhibits at the power-boat show which are constantly surrounded by visitors are two in which self-starting devices are shown attached to motors.

The powerboat owner does not like to crank the motor any better than does the automobile owner and consequently anything that promises relief from that exercise is greeted with enthusiasm. One of these self-starters which the manufacturers claim is equally as applicable to an automobile as to a motorboat, is that shown on a four-cylinder motor. It consists of a device whereby a part of the burned mixture is taken from the cylinder at the moment of the explosion and stored in a tank. The device is so arranged that no unexploded gas can pass into the tank. Then by means of a magnetic arrangement wired up with the timer the compression is released, burned gas under compression is directed into the proper cylinder and the motor is turned over. At the same time the fresh gas is taken into the right cylinder the ignition comes into play and the motor is started.

THE CAT IN THE HOUSE

From the Philadelphia Ledger.

The presence of a cat, to those who care for him, is tranquilizing and a mental restorative. A cat asleep in the most comfortable chair in the room or drowsing on the window seat suggests reposefulness as almost nothing else can do. A cat's purr spells profound contentment and is the synonym of perfect peace. No other domestic animal has such a soft fur to stroke. If it is a weakness in a human to care for a cat, the cat-lover rules in the excellent company of the good and great of all the ages.

BEN GREET PLAYERS AT THE WHITE HOUSE

Giving an Outdoor Performance of Shakespeare's "A Midsummer Night's Dream" on the Lawn of the White House.

For the first time in the history of this nation a theatrical company was invited, or as they say in England, commanded to appear before the President of the United States. There have been numerous instances where the chief executive has been pleased with the individual work of various artists or group of artists and has asked them to visit him at his home in Washington, D. C., but when last spring he extended an invitation to the Ben Greet Players to give an outdoor performance of "A Midsummer Night's Dream" on the lawn of the White House before himself, family and noted state men President Roosevelt established a precedent for the future rulers of this country.

President Roosevelt had become much interested in the Ben Greet Players on account of the [illegible] of the classics which these players were giving on the campus of the Columbia university and other large eastern colleges. So when Ben Greet came to Washington, he asked him to his [illegible] a [illegible] production of Shakespeare's delightful comedy, "A Midsummer Night's [illegible] This gave much to the pleasure of the President as well as that of his guests, who included many of the [illegible] statesmen and diplomats of the world.

The Ben Greet Players, accompanied by the [illegible] Symphony Orchestra, are now touring the country, playing "A Midsummer Night's Dream," with [illegible] in the [illegible] parts played by the cast.

SPRING OPENING

Announcement

Is made of our

Opening Reception

and Exhibition of Spring Styles in

MILLINERY

Gowns, Frocks, Suits, Wraps, etc.,

Monday, March 15th

Tomorrow we formally open the Spring Season with a style function of prime importance. The correct interpretations from the recognized style authorities of America and Europe are displayed in this assemblage to which we invite you to review. The vital purpose of this opening event is the presentation to the ladies of Colorado Springs and vicinity a complete showing of the authentic styles for Spring and Summer, to forcibly demonstrate this store's prestige among the world's leading manufacturers, and to fully illustrate our undeniable supremacy as the house of style and quality. While Monday, March the fifteenth has been set aside as show day, the exhibit will extend on into the week; therefore, if you cannot possibly attend tomorrow, you may come Tuesday or Wednesday and review the same elaborate display. Our second floor has been beautifully and tastefully decorated for the occasion. An atmosphere of Spring permeates every section, and you will find this store an enjoyable place to visit. Everywhere there is evidence of readiness, and as you linger admiringly among the new and artistic things for Spring, you will quickly decide on this store as the proper place to select your 1909 attire.

The masterpieces of the Fashion designers take their places in this exhibition, representing the highest craft of artistic ingenuity. The chief attraction will center in the Millinery and Ready-to-Wear sections. However, every department of the store has displayed the choicest of the Spring productions, and it is with profound pleasure that we turn this store into a great reception hall to entertain our many patrons.

Fashionable Afternoon Frocks and Evening Gowns

The many style innovations to which Fashion has set the seal of approval, is exemplified in this comprehensive display. The "Empress Josephine" is the 1909 creation to which all styles trend, and is the modified style of the directoire traits so prominent last season. The long, graceful lines, short waist, hipless effect, portraying correct elegance, predominates, still there is such a divergance of captivating ideas the most fastidious will choose quickly and easily.

The soft, clinging Silks are embodied in all of the Spring styles, with a preference for the rich and lustrous Messalines; and we must not overlook the Foulards, which are more popular this season than ever. All of the new colors seem to hint of another, which is often carried out in the trimmings. Ashes of roses, soft grey, greens, amethyst, the golden bronze, mustard, soft shades of Wistaria and such are the newest in colorings. In the Silk Dresses we show a range from $15 to $100.

Chic Tailored Suits

Whether you choose an inexpensive Tailored Suit at $15, one of our exclusive novelties at $90, or some one of the styles that lie between these two extremes, the same careful workmanship is evident, and there is that indefinable something "individuality" that appeals to fashionable women. There is no one color or style that dominates. Instead, we show so many different types every taste may be gratified. Our range of Suits at the popular prices—$25, $30, $32.50, $35, $40 and $45—is far greater than we have ever shown, and each Suit is characteristically a Giddings style.

Bewitchingly Beautiful Spring Millinery

You have undoubtedly viewed many praiseworthy Millinery exhibits; some, of course, more notable than others; we doubt, however, if ever you have attended an opening where such elegance and refinement prevailed everywhere. There are French models from the foremost Parisian designers, New York Tailored and Pattern Hats, and may clever ideas designed in our own work room. There's something "different" about the Millinery we show. Every Hat has its own individual charms, and the range of different models is almost endless.

Fashion has decreed that jet, bead trimming, rich Paradise, aigrettes and ostrich plumes shall form the most important part of the trimmings on the Spring Hats, and we must unhesitatingly obey the dictates. Of course, flowers and foliage will be in big demand; and for the Street Hats, quills, wings, etc., will be worn. We could go on and expatiate upon these charming models, but could not begin to impress you as compared to a visit to our store on Monday.

Children's Hats

An important feature of our Spring Millinery will be the section devoted to Misses and Children. In making and selecting these Junior Hats, the most careful attention to detail has been given. The younger set rightly deserves this extra attention, and this store has made extra efforts to comply with their demands. You'll find in our exhibit a comprehensive lot of fashionable little Hats that will thoroughly please the young ladies.

Remaking and Trimming Hats

Under the supervision of Miss Hamilton, we are prepared to design new shapes, copy any Style you wish, or remake your old hat at a small expense to you.

GIDDINGS BROS

The opening reception will be from 9 a. m. to 6 p. m., and you are cordially invited to attend.

A GENTLE TRAVELER

By Annie Hamilton Donnell

MISS SARAH'S great day dawned serene and promising. Miss Sarah rose early to do a few remaining things, at one of them she hesitated, irresolute.

"Bismarck," she said, looking down sorrowfully at the great gray fellow, "I don't like to leave you behind a mite. Not but you'd be perfectly safe over to Marthy Flagg's it ain't that. But seems so selfish, me going traveling and you staying to home. You are just as deserving of a good time—Bismarck, I'll take you! You're going traveling, Bismarck!"

She got a covered basket and lined it comfortably. Bismarck's lunch she put up with her own, wrapped as daintily in carefully-ironed tissue paper. It was getting close to time to start—Miss Sarah called within an hour close—and she must say good-by to the neighbors. Putting on her shabby little black bonnet as hurriedly as her excited old fingers would allow, pinning her shabby black shawl, locking the shabby little house—Miss Sarah's world was in a whirl; the very air palpitated with action. Only Bismarck, placidly marveling in his comfortable prison, was calm.

She made a second round of doors and windows, locked a last loving time into all the shabby little rooms and then at last was ready. There had been room in the valise for the lunch box and the hand usually reserved for that was free for Bismarck's heavy basket. Miss Sarah took it up and, balanced by the heavy bag in the other hand, went laboriously down the sunny, morning road. But Miss Sarah's soul was unimpeded—light.

The great day was an annual happening. Once every year Miss Sarah "traveled." It was her red-letter day, to which she looked forward eagerly and upon which she happily looked back. There had been countless this great day, a round dozen of them. Miss Sarah was 67. She made her gentle, happy plans for many more travelings.

In the valise were all her best things folded with exquisite care. The sleeves of the best black dress were stuffed with soft paper, as Miss Sarah had read was proper for best sleeves. The night dress Miss Sarah had folded so painstakingly had never been, might never be, worn. It was a sacred night dress, dedicated to this yearly going abroad. All the daintiness of lace and cambric that Miss Sarah's lean old body craved to clothe itself in was concentrated in this one sheer and dainty garment. The consciousness that it was there in the valise imparted a sense of luxurious-ness and pride—made Miss Sarah walk a little straighter possibly, and hold a little coftly her small gray head.

At Marthy Flagg's she set down her burdens and opened the kitchen door with country familiarity. The family was at breakfast.

"Why, Miss Sarah—why!"—the last one due to the bonnet and shawl.

"Yes, I've started on my travels. I'm going to ketch the half-past six train down to the Junction. I just stopped to say good-by—no—no, I didn't bring Bismarck for you to see to, Marthy. He's going traveling, too; it's time he saw something o' the world. Good-by—good-by. Hope you'll have good hay weather, Simeon—hope the hens'll lay well—Don't you go to getting ale but up now, Marthy, fleshly's you be! I wish you were all going, too—good-by."

The plain, rough faces about the little kitchen table teased with the humor of the occasion, as they had creases on eleven previous occasions when Miss Sarah came to say good-by. But underneath the humor was real tenderness. Marthy Flagg got up, fleshily and plodded to the door. "We'll be glad to see you back," she called after the carefully balanced little old figure disappearing down the road. "We shall miss you—miss—you!"

Miss Sarah stopped a moment at all the houses, making her hurried, excited little farewells and wishing good things to everybody. At the house next to Marthy Flagg's she hoped the baby would get well before she got back and the baby's mother get a little snatch o' rest. At the house beyond—that now wouldn't lose the pindling heifer she'd heard was taken—sick astray. Miss Sarah's path to the station of the tiny branch road was strewn with gentle good wishes. Some one in Little River had named Miss Sarah the Well-wisher, and the name clung to her. It was not an empty title, but went, every one knows, with gentle deeds. But today Miss Sarah had only time for the wishes.

Aboard the one car that jerked and coaxed gently behind the engine Miss Sarah sank back with a long sigh. She hoped they would not start at once; she did not want to begin out of breath. And every moment being precious, she longed to prolong.

"We're going to start in a minute, Bismarck," she whispered into the basket. "You'll feel a jolt and we'll be going. I'll open the basket and let you look out, maybe."

It was not a new prospect to Miss Sarah. She knew all the fields and pastures and scattered homes along the way—which was not a long way—to the Junction. But there were plenty of new things to see—new shingles on old roofs, new-painted crops, new little sunburned children. Miss Sarah watched the clothslines and smiled with pleasure at the discovery of tiny long clothes on them. She held tightly in her arms the great soft bulk of Bismarck and made aloud her delighted commentts. Already the new wine of youth and change and travel tingled in her old veins.

In less than half an hour the little train jerked its modest way into the great trainshed of the Junction and the real excitement of the day began. What went before was only the thin soup that heralds the feast. Miss Sarah, valise and Bismarck, descended to the platform in a twitter of delicious anticipation. There was her own particular vantage point to secure if possible, the seat that commanded all entrances impartially and was nearest to the spot the train announced usually selected at which to shout his trains. It was empty! Joyously Miss Sarah bore down upon it. Quite familiarly and at her ease she threaded the crowd—Miss Sarah was an experienced traveler.

This especial Junction was the meeting point of two great lines as well as of several little branches like the one to Little River. The big station had a fine, metropolitan air and was always filled with a bustling throng of tourists. Its restaurant and news stand, waiting rooms and long, covered platform were Miss Sarah's wonder and pride. As one of its old patrons she considered herself eligible to pride in its glories.

The enjoyment began at once. The plain face under the black bonnet beamed good wishes on the entire roomful at large, then Miss Sarah proceeded to pick out her particular "folks." That young mother over there in the corner jogging a fretting baby in a monotonous, patient way—Miss Sarah sat and watched her closely and made her interested inferences. The poor thing was tired out—then she'd been there a good while. The baby lurched and fumed futilely—then the baby was teething. It was hard to travel with a teething baby. Miss Sarah saw her first opportunity.

"Bismarck"—she set the big basket on the seat—"you keep this place for me. I'm coming right back." And crossing the room she "accosted" the young mother with the fretting child.

"Dearie, you let me hold him a little spell. You come across and sit with me—there's a seat next to mine. You're all worn out."

Yes, oh, yes, the young mother was all "worn out" and the chance to rest her arms was sorely needed. Moreover Miss Sarah's face was a plain letter to her kind, old heart. With a sigh of relief the young mother surrendered her uneasy burden and followed with her bags across the room to Bismarck.

"But your train—you might miss it," she said as—her self down. Miss Sarah smiled and dandled the baby.

"I'm going to stay all day," Miss Sarah said with gentle finality.

"Oh," smiled the other, a little puzzled but assured. "That's a longer wait than mine, but, mercy, it seems as if I'd been here all day! I've got an hour more."

"Have you had anything to eat—to breakfast? And been traveling all night! Well, now, you go get you a cup o' tea—this minute. I'll be right here when you come back, an' the baby, too! I shouldn't be a mite surprised if he dropped off to sleep."

The young mother turned impulsively. "I guess you've had plenty of babies of your own," she said and wondered at the sudden dimming of the radiance in Miss Sarah's eyes. The old face descended suddenly to the level of the tiny new face and the faded cheek touched softly the little, round, cool one.

"No," Miss Sarah sighed gently, "but I've had plenty of other folks'. Other folks have been real good to me. If you can't have your own that's next best, my dear."

Trains came and went. The bustle was delightful to travel-hungry Miss Sarah, and the raucous, strained voice of the train announcer was music in her ears. After the young mother and the baby went away she cast about her for new acquaintances, for Miss Sarah could not exist friendless for even a day. A torn young maiden going on her first quest for independence and hard-earned experiences, a raw youth in the awkward consciousness of his first long trousers; a frightened old woman, a garrulous old man—Miss Sarah got acquainted with them all in a gentle, Miss Sarah way. All their little stories opened to her and made interesting pages in her book of great days—"The Experiences of a Traveler." It might aptly be called, and this would be "the twelfth chapter."

"Bismarck," whispered Miss Sarah into the chinks of the big basket, "I'm having a beautiful time, aren't you? And we've got a whole half day left! We'll eat our dinner soon's the Grand Old Woman's train comes. I've got to see she gets on all right. It must be hard traveling when you ain't used to it."

Miss Sarah was used to it. The confusion and clatter and din of voices only set her pulses beating a little faster than usual; she was serenely unafraid. The hard seats were "flowery beds of ease" to Miss Sarah. The hands of the great station clock moved too fast for her.

"This is the Montreal through express, Bismarck, that's coming now. Hear the man calling it out, stop-hurrying and listen! You think of it, Montreal! Supposing we, Bismarck, 'll almost like going on it! You and me and the valise!" Miss Sarah had ecstatic mental visions. Her old eyes gleamed. She had been in the same way to New York, to Wilson—to other most parts. In one great day one can, if rightly minded, go so far. Miss Sarah was rightly minded.

The family was on the through express, but it would seem not going through. Miss Sarah watched intelligently the platform, member by member, she counted excitedly. Nine—

"Nine Bismarcks. That's queer. I never remember nine before. There's a mother and and—three same—there's the baby's dear little children. They're coming toward our seat."

Baskets and baggages were stowed the most of it in a long row, bumping beside Miss Sarah. Into the very next seat to her sank the mother of many with a long-drawn sigh. She was a dainty, naturally pretty woman, but travel-fretted and worn. The voice that should be sweet sounded rasped impatient.

"Well, we're all here. Getting off and on is such nervous work! Give me the baby, Bergitta, and go and tell them all to move from their seats at the peril of their lives. We've got two hours to wait and it may kill them, but so would getting run over! You'd better move Lawrence up nearer to me and tell Elliott and Katherine they can play cats' cradle—get them a string."

Bergitta was the maid, it seemed. Her round, pink and white Swedish face was frowning with anxiety. Seven were too many for one mother and one maid—Miss Sarah's fingers and feet and heart tingled to help. She knew she should offer, it was only a matter of time. Suddenly she decided not to lose any time.

"Neighbor, I take the baby?" She turned to the fretted mother. "There's so many others for you to see to. I would as well as not. I've got a—a—better than not! She's good as gold. When you don't like it—why, it's next best to hold other folks' baby."

The dainty woman was on her feet in a high old flare. "There, there, I'm not afraid of strangers. Miss—Miss—what's your name, dearie? You're a good soul, aren't you, Nell? Yes, there are a good many of us when it comes to make up." But there might be a question. My husband had to stay up-country at the last minute and it—it—rather unfitted me. I shall be thankful when we all get home whole!"

"Oh, I guess you will—a—your children was native to Miss Sarah. She was not conscious that she said "dearie" it was the spontaneous symbol of a sympathy bound to express itself. "Well, if the baby won't come to me to take care of some o' the others. If there's one that's a little timber 'n the rest—"

"There is—Lawrence," breathed the mother of seven, "but I couldn't think of imposing him upon a—"

"Impose him right on me," commanded Miss Sarah gently. "Is that him, the nipper? Is bringing that way? Why, he's a little dear. Little dear, don't you want to know what I've got in my basket? Something alive! If you'll come here and sit with—" Lawrence came sidling.

Names of Men Used by Women

From the Brooklyn Eagle.

SOME interesting reasons why women novelists choose to write under masculine pseudonyms are given by a number of famous English writers in the following

Charles Marlowe (Miss Harriett Jay) writes plays under the name of "Charles Marlowe" because "being a novelist as well as a dramatist, I think it better to keep the one quite distinct from the other."

My reason for choosing this particular name is simple. When the idea of using a dramatic nom de plume first occurred to me I happened to be writing a comedy which was afterwards produced at the vaudeville theater under the title of "Fascination." The leading part in this play—that of a girl who impersonates a boy—I created myself, and made in it a great success. The name of the girl was Lady Madge Hazelton, that of the boy "Charles Marlowe." I have used the name ever since.

John Strange Winter (Mrs. Arthur Stannard): On the whole I think it is to a woman's disadvantage to write as a man, as it may convey an idea to some people that she is not good enough to stand on her own pedestal.

The other truth was that my first publishers refused to bring out "Cavalry Life" under a feminine pseudonym. I have no doubt they were wise and, though I did not relish it, I was enough of a Yorkshire woman to rise in revolt on which side my bread was buttered.

With regard to the actual choice of the pen name one of the stories in "Cavalry Life" was done in the first person, and the character was a corporal. Jane Strange Winter. After some consideration I thought I could not do better than credit this imaginary chap, the subject of the other stories with the authorship of the book.

George Eliot (Mrs. Cross) said, "Georgie" it was the nearest symbol to a sympathy bound to express itself. "Well, if the baby won't come to me to take care of some o' the others. If there's one that's a little timber 'n the rest—"

"There is—Lawrence," breathed the mother of seven, "but I couldn't think of imposing him upon a—"

"What's a woman's work is, and I believe I was handicapped by the mere fact of her sex. The voteless woman witnesses to the injustice of man, an injustice which is dealt to woman by editors and publishers in common with other men. The use of a male pen name gives a writer a better chance of publication and a fair audience.

Theo Gift (Mrs. H. D. Sulg—): My reasons for taking "Theo Gift" as a pseudonym were simple. When I began to write novels and publish them—38 years ago—I was a young girl, and at that date girls were neither hardened to outside opinions nor as independent of their elders, as they are now. If I had attempted to make a name for myself in the literary world under my own patronymic and had been ill received, it would have been felt that I had disgraced the family name.

So I took a pseudonym, which, after all, was my own already. My name is Dorothea, the Anglicised version of Dorothea, which means "gift of God." I translated "Dora" into "Gift," leaving "Theo" (from a sense of modesty which I am sure you will see was not uncalled for) in the original Latin, and—voilà tout!

It served me well. It was short and simple, and the public and my reviewers treated it so kindly, even from its first using, till illness laid it on the shelf, that I have grown to feel a tenderness for it.

Curtis Yorke (Miss E. M. Symonds): Because I believe a woman's work is handicapped by the mere fact of her sex. The voteless woman witnesses to the injustice of man, an injustice which is dealt to woman by editors and publishers in common with other men. The use of a male pen name gives a writer a better chance of publication and a fair audience.

The use of a male pen name gives a writer a better chance of publication and a fair audience.

George Paston (Miss E. M. Symonds): Nearly every review of every novel and every play I have written has been with some form of this question: "Why do all women writers take the name of George?" It would be about as reasonable to ask "Why are all men writers born with the name of Benson?" As a matter of fact, I believe there are fewer women writers with the pseudonym of George than there are men writers with the family name of Benson.

When I chose the name of George Paston there was no other female George in the field except George Fleming, who had not come before the public for some time.

As a Norfolk woman I chose the name of Paston from the little village "where the letters come from." But, it may be asked, why does a woman prefer to write under a masculine pseudonym rather than under her own name? The answer is to be found in the desire for fair play, which a woman seldom gets from men, and partly from dread of making a public failure. When I say that a woman seldom gets fair play I don't mean that she is personally treated more harshly on account of her sex. I mean that she is often treated with so-called chivalry—in other words, a contemptuous indulgence on account of her sex. The motive of novels in the critical and monthly reviews frequently begin with some remark as "This work is written by a lady," or "not the object of [illegible]

TO OLD GLORY.

The old flag waves, whatever they do
With its golden stars in a field of blue;
It floats on the wind and it sweeps with the breeze
On the hills of the dawn, in the desk of the seas.

The old flag waves when they come or go,
The flag of the high and the flag of the low;
And the lived land smiles where the sunbeams sweet
Lay a kiss on the bloom where the green ways meet.

The old flag waves, and it will stay still O'er the breast of the vale and the crest of the hill;
Through charge and calm or storm and strife
The sweet old flag of the country's life.

The other truth was that my first publishers refused to bring out "Cavalry Life" under a feminine pseudonym. I have no doubt they were wise and, though I did not relish it, I was enough of a Yorkshire woman to rise in revolt on which side my bread was buttered.

With regard to the actual choice of the pen name one of the stories in "Cavalry Life" was done in the first person, and the character was a corporal. Jane Strange Winter. After some consideration I thought I could not do better than credit this imaginary chap, the subject of the other stories with the authorship of the book.

George Eliot (Mrs. Cross) said, "Georgie" it was the nearest symbol to a sympathy bound to express itself. "Well, if the baby won't come to me to take care of some o' the others. If there's one that's a little timber 'n the rest—"

"There is—Lawrence," breathed the mother of seven, "but I couldn't think of imposing him upon a—"

"Impose him right on me," commanded Miss Sarah gently. "Is that him, the nipper? Is bringing that way? Why, he's a little dear. Little dear, don't you want to know what I've got in my basket? Something alive! If you'll come here and sit with—" Lawrence came sidling.

"What's a woman's work is, and I believe I was handicapped by the mere fact of her sex. The voteless woman witnesses to the injustice of man, an injustice which is dealt to woman by editors and publishers in common with other men. The use of a male pen name gives a writer a better chance of publication and a fair audience.

Theo Gift (Mrs. H. D. Sulg—): My reasons for taking "Theo Gift" as a pseudonym were simple. When I began to write novels and publish them—38 years ago—I was a young girl, and at that date girls were neither hardened to outside opinions nor as independent of their elders, as they are now. If I had attempted to make a name for myself in the literary world under my own patronymic and had been ill received, it would have been felt that I had disgraced the family name.

So I took a pseudonym, which, after all, was my own already. My name is Dorothea, the Anglicised version of Dorothea, which means "gift of God." I translated "Dora" into "Gift," leaving "Theo" (from a sense of modesty which I am sure you will see was not uncalled for) in the original Latin, and—voilà tout!

It served me well. It was short and simple, and the public and my reviewers treated it so kindly, even from its first using, till illness laid it on the shelf, that I have grown to feel a tenderness for it.

Curtis Yorke (Miss E. M. Symonds): Because I believe a woman's work is handicapped by the mere fact of her sex. The voteless woman witnesses to the injustice of man, an injustice which is dealt to woman by editors and publishers in common with other men. The use of a male pen name gives a writer a better chance of publication and a fair audience.

George Paston (Miss E. M. Symonds): Nearly every review of every novel and every play I have written has been with some form of this question: "Why do all women writers take the name of George?" It would be about as reasonable to ask "Why are all men writers born with the name of Benson?" As a matter of fact, I believe there are fewer women writers with the pseudonym of George than there are men writers with the family name of Benson.

When I chose the name of George Paston there was no other female George in the field except George Fleming, who had not come before the public for some time.

As a Norfolk woman I chose the name of Paston from the little village "where the letters come from." But, it may be asked, why does a woman prefer to write under a masculine pseudonym rather than under her own name? The answer is to be found in the desire for fair play, which a woman seldom gets from men, and partly from dread of making a public failure. When I say that a woman seldom gets fair play I don't mean that she is personally treated more harshly on account of her sex. I mean that she is often treated with so-called chivalry—in other words, a contemptuous indulgence on account of her sex. The motive of novels in the critical and monthly reviews frequently begin with some remark as "This work is written by a lady," or "not the object of [illegible]

Help me to keep inside my jaws.

Mid March in Colorado Springs Society

"A March! We know thou art kind-hearted spite of ugly looks and threats, And out of sight are nursing April's violets."

—Helen Hunt

The proposed memorial to Abraham Lincoln was heartily indorsed, and the organization voted to donate $100 to start the fund. Mrs. McNeil impressed upon the members their promise to do all in their power to preserve the American flag from promiscuous use which would desecrate it.

Upon adjournment an elegant luncheon was served in the pink and gold dining room of the hotel. The D. A. R. colors were effectively seen in the decorations which were particularly artistic. To meet Mrs. Robert P. Davis, who has recently returned to the city, Mrs. Oliver H. Shoup gave a luncheon of unique and harmonious appointment on inauguration day at her home on North Nevada avenue. Ribbons in the tri-colors were festooned from the electrolier and the place cards were embellished with flags. The tables were set in the form of the Greek letter Pi and decorated in daffodils and smilax. The colors of the fraternity, purple and gold, and potted palms still further accentuated the pretty scene. The menu and toasts were contained in a handsome souvenir inclosed in a cover of purple ooze leather and printed in gold. While the banquet progressed the Misses West furnished enjoyable violin and piano selections.

President Hammond fulfilled the duties of toastmaster most happily. Professor Pattison, an honorary member of the society, responded to the toast "Reminiscences." Mr. Paul Clifford [illegible] Mr. Glenn Shaw, "The Ladies." Mr. Glenn Shaw, "The Future," and Mr. Bert Stiles, "Pearsons."

As the guests arrived they were welcomed in the reception hall by Mrs. Blackman and Mrs. Hamilton, the president of the federation.

The handsome music room at the residence of Dr. and Mrs. Alfred A. Blackman on Wood avenue, with its huge open fireplace and decoration of stately palms, formed an ideal setting for the rendition of Thomas Moore's poems in the weird Irish melodies. Mrs. Seldomridge gave a brief biographical sketch of Moore and then sang the songs with an artistic interpretation. Mrs. Bert Davis was the accompanist.

Announcement was made that the next meeting of the federation would be on Saturday, May 1, and that then would occur the annual breakfast, which was unavoidably postponed last fall. WOMAN'S CLUB NEWS

WITHIN my home that empty seemed I sat
And prayed for greater blessings. Al
That was mine own seemed poor and mean and small;
And I cried out rebelliously for that
I had not saying if great gifts of gold
Were only mine, journeys in far-off lands
Were also mine, with rest for burdened hands,
If love the love I craved would come and fold
Its arms around me; then would joy abide
With me forever, peace would come and bless
And life would round out from this narrowness
Into a fullness new and sweet and wide.
And so I fretted gainst my simple lot,
And so I prayed for fairer, broader ways
Making a burden of the very days
In mad regret for that which I had not.
And then one came unto my humble door
And asked to enter. "Art thou love?" I cried.
Or wealth or fame? Else thou shalt be denied."
She answered: "Nay, my child, but I am more."
Open to me I pray, make me thy guest,
And thou shalt find although no gift of gold
Or fame or love within my hand I hold,
That with it coming cometh all the best.
This [illegible] longed for [illegible] the grave of face
[illegible] voice, and in her hand [illegible]
I saw the look of one both true and wise
My heart was sore and so with tardy grace
I made her enter. How transfigured
Seemed then the faithful love that at my feet
So long had lain unprized! How wide and sweet Shone the small paths wherein I had been led!
Duty grew beautiful with calm consent
I saw the direst wealth of land and sea
But all fair things seemed given unto me
The hour I clasped the hand of dear Content.

UNFINISHED LIVES.

There are no lives unfinished, incomplete,
God gives each man at birth some work to do.
Some precious stone of strange, prismatic hue
To carve and polish, till it shall be meet
To place within His temple, still and sweet.
Ere that be done the soul may not pass through
The door to grander worlds, to aim more true,
To wider life with love's sweet joys replete.
And if the working time be short, and earth
With its dear human ties be hard to leave,
Be sure that God, whose thought hath given thee birth,
Still holds for thee the best thou canst achieve;
Be sure the soul in passing through that door,
Although losing much, gains infinitely more.

Mabelle P. Clapp.

REPOSE.

The camel, at the close of day,
Kneels down upon the sandy plain
To have his burden lifted off,
And rest to gain.

My soul, thou, too, shouldst to thy knees
When daylight draweth to a close,
And let thy Master lift the load
And grant repose.

Else how couldst thou tomorrow meet
With all tomorrow's work to do?

WHEN THEY FIRST USED SOAP

From the Sunday Magazine.

The term "soap" seems to indicate a Germanic origin. Thus, in Anglo-Saxon, it is called sape, in German seife, in Icelandic sapa, in Swedish sapa, in Danish saebe, in Flemish seppio, which latter Skinner derives from the Anglo-Saxon sapin, to macerate, but which, according to Wachter, might as well be derived from the Anglo-Saxon suben, to purify.

It is also said that soap received its name from the town of Savonna, near Genoa. The wife of a fisherman of that town, having heated lye of soda in a vessel impregnated with olive oil, thus accidentally discovered this composition. Many scholars believe that soap was unknown to the ancients; but there is documentary evidence in support of the contrary opinion.

There is found no trace whatever of soap or an analogous substance among the Greeks. When Homer in his Odyssey describes Princess Nausica washing linen with her servants, he fails to mention any substance except water in washing. Among the Romans, however, soap was known from the first century of our era. Pliny writes: "They also use the soap invented by the Gauls, for giving the hair a blond color. It is made of tallow and ashes. The best is made of beech ashes and goat suet. There are two kinds, soft and liquid. Both are used by the Germans, and the men use them more than the women."

In the ruins of Pompeii soap houses have been found, which prove beyond doubt that the preparation of soap was known to the ancient Romans.

THE BEST REMEDY

For Women Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Noah, Ky. — "I was passing through the Change of Life and suffered from headaches, nervous prostration, and hemorrhages.

"Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound made me well and strong, so that I can do all my housework, and attend to the store and post-office, and I feel much younger than I really am. "Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is the most successful remedy for all kinds of female troubles, and I feel that I can never praise it enough." Mrs. Lewis Holland, Noah, Ky.

The Change of Life is the most critical period of a woman's existence, and neglect of health at this time invites disease and pain.

Women everywhere should remember that there is no other remedy known to medicine that will so successfully carry women through this trying period as Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made from native roots and herbs.

For 30 years it has been curing women from the worst forms of female ills — inflammation, ulceration, displacements, fibroid tumors, irregularities, periodic pains, backache, and nervous prostration.

If you would like special advice about your case, write a confidential letter to Mrs. Pinkham at Lynn, Mass. Her advice is free, and always helpful.

Box Parties at the Majestic.

During the last week there have been quite a number of box parties at the Majestic theater, the local neat and cozy home of refined vaudeville. Many of these parties have been made up of the city's prominent society folks, who have enjoyed the exceptionally good entertainments of a high class now being presented.

Box parties are becoming quite the thing among society folks, both in Colorado Springs and Denver. The Broadway and the Orpheum in Denver are extensively patronized by those who take pleasure in visiting the play in little groups, and the practice is constantly increasing.

The patronage of the Majestic by those adopting the same plan in this city demonstrates the appreciation of the prominent people of the Springs of the tasteful and comfortable surroundings that have been provided by the Majestic management, as well as their approval and enjoyment of the excellent entertainments given.

A Tip For Fat Women

In a few years that excess fat of yours will become a bad habit impossible to break. Better take time by the forelock and reduce now in a natural way if you would keep intact the youthful symmetry of 30 through the trying years of middle age. Go to the druggist and ask him for ½ ounce Marmola, ½ ounce Fluid Extract Cascara Aromatic and 2½ ounces Peppermint Water; dose, one teaspoonful after meals and at bedtime. Mix them at home if you wish, but see that the Marmola comes to you in a sealed package.

This mixture makes firm fleshed, well-formed women out of flabby, shapeless ones. It animates their stomachs to burn up the food fats instead of allowing them to gather at the waist line. Without disturbing the diet or requiring exercise to help it out it dissolves the fat away just where needed the most. It has been known to melt away harmlessly as much as 16 ounces a day without causing a single wrinkle.

BLAUTIFUL HAIR FROM A HOME-MADE TONIC

Every woman desires beautiful hair and a good tonic for it is one necessary adjunct to the toilet as is soap or tooth powder. But good hair tonics are expensive. Here is a recipe for a home-made preparation that will give as good or better results than the highest priced ready made tonic and for just half as much. Mix half a pint of alcohol with half a pint of water, add a teaspoonful of Beta Quinol. Simply shake well together and your tonic is ready for use. If you prefer you can use a pint of imported bay rum instead of the alcohol and water. Beta Quinol used daily will give vitality, health and attractiveness to the hair. Any woman who appreciates the value of luxuriant and glossy hair cannot afford to be without this almost magical tonic. Any druggist will supply you with Beta Quinol and should not try to substitute.

THE PUGILISTING OF STARCHING

From the Sunday Magazine.

The practice of starching linen is about 400 years old. It is said to have originated under Queen Elizabeth. Its inventor was a Dutch woman, the wife of a Mr. Guilheem, who was driver at the royal court. Mrs. Guilheem understood so well how to improve a small deficiency in the bust of her royal mistress by means of stiffened collars, frills, and laces that Elizabeth overwhelmed her with favors and privileges, and finally elevated her to the rank of chief inspectress of the court linen.

The fashion introduced by the Dutch woman, of course, soon followed by all the women of rank. The fad for this new "art" finally degenerated into a veritable mania for starching, ironing, pleating, etc. Later special "professors" of the art of starching established themselves in London, among whom a Flemish woman by the name of Dingwin van der Plasse seems to have occupied the highest rank. This gifted lady is to be initiated by her in the art had to pay no less than five pounds for a lesson.

Later, they began to add blue color to the starch. Queen Elizabeth, who was very anxious about her questionable beauty, found that the addition of blue gave a green hue to her complexion. She therefore prohibited her subjects wearing any other than pure white starched linen, claiming that blue washed linen was injurious to health. But fashion proved stronger even than "good Queen Bess." They continued merrily to use blue starch, though one woman after the other had to go to prison for transgressing the "blue laws."

SUPERFLUOUS HAIR

Doctors Say There Is a Harmless, Safe and Sure Way to Remove It.

Dr. Starbuck Says: "I Feel Justified in Making the Assertion That It Is the Only Successful Method of Destroying Hair."

Every woman who is afflicted with superfluous hair will undoubtedly be glad to know that there is but one proper and logical method of getting rid of this most annoying and embarrassing disfigurement.

The best authorities in the medical profession state that De Miracle will destroy hair successfully, although there are many other unreliable things which claim to do it. The success which has attended this preparation as a means of removing hair is based upon the method by which it works. It is a purely scientific principle and totally different from the pastes and powders and other remedies which simply break off the hair in the same way that the razor does, making the hair when it grows out again heavier and coarser, as far as the electric needle or X-ray is concerned, both are not only unsatisfactory, but dangerous as well. The scars and burns of the electric needle last for a lifetime and the dangers of the X-ray are indeed serious.

De Miracle may be used without any inconvenience or danger of any kind. The method by which it removes hair should not be classed or confused with that of the fake free treatments which are advertised so extensively in the newspapers.

Remember De Miracle is the only method for removing hair which is endorsed by physicians, surgeons, dermatologists, medical journals and prominent magazines.

We shall be pleased indeed to send you absolutely free, in plain sealed envelope a 54-page booklet containing full information concerning this remarkable treatment as well as testimonials of prominent physicians, surgeons, dermatologists, medical journals and the principal magazines of the world, before you try anything. It tells the subject exhaustively. Write to the De Miracle Chemical Co., Dept. M, Park avenue, New York, simply saying you want this booklet and it will be mailed at once.

Real Independence In Owning Your Home

"TO live in a home that is all your own is real independence.

It's pleasant to know that you will have a comfortable home when you have grown old and unable to work, and it's a duty toward your family.

You who think that only the rich can afford to own their own homes are clinging to a mistaken idea.

Reading the Real Estate Columns of The Gazette proves that this is all wrong. Read them and be convinced how cheaply you can buy a home.

Here is a man who must sell his home on account of sickness. Another must sell quickly because he needs quick cash. You can arrange for small monthly payments, too.

There are many concerns who make a specialty of selling homes on easy payments. Read Gazette Want Ads for the best bargains and for your own good.

WIRELESS MARKET LETTER

THE LAW *

Since the sinking of the Steamship "Republic," the lawmaking bodies of a number of Foreign Governments, besides the United States, have enacted (or are to enact) laws compelling Steamship Companies to equip their vessels with Wireless Telegraph Systems.

The recent installations of MARCONI WIRELESS TELEGRAPHY on their Empire State Express, the Lake Shore Limited and other fast trains, is another factor to be considered by the investor.

In consequence hereof, MARCONI WIRELESS Securities are not only at a big advance in price, but the supply of these stocks available for trading is almost exhausted. This is a serious condition for you and us and all who buy and sell them.

There are not today 10,000 Shares of CANADIAN MARCONI to be bought at anything less than par.

There are not as many as 500 shares AMERICAN MARCONI to be had today, even if you would bid them up to $100.00 a share.

The supply of ENGLISH MARCONI COMMON is nearly exhausted. We have this information upon the highest authority, and we could not ourselves make a contract for as little as $15,000 worth to be delivered in 30 days time.

THE RESULT IN THE STOCK MARKET

UNITED WIRELESS Pref. advanced from $32.50 to $35.00.
AMERICAN MARCONI STOCK advanced from $12.00 to $35.00.
CANADIAN MARCONI STOCK advanced from $1.05 to $5.00.
ENGLISH MARCONI COMMON advanced from $2.50 to above par.
ENGLISH MARCONI PREF. advanced from par to ten (8) times par.
All other WIRELESS STOCKS advanced correspondingly.

Now then, the only first class Wireless stock, in an operating company, that we can supply with any degree of regularity (fortunately the very best of all the latest issue) is the MARCONI WIRELESS PREFERRED (Parent Company), the 7 per cent Cumulative Participating stock, and the supply of this stock is so limited that one good stock deal for 10,000 shares would clean out the market. ALL ENGLISH MARCONI COMES IN BEARER WARRANTS, WITH DIVIDEND COUPONS ATTACHED.

In view of the above, we will accept advance orders for 10 to 10 shares or more "at Market," $13.50, for future (or delayed) delivery (2 weeks), provided $100.00 is remitted immediately when telegraphic order to "buy at Market" is sent to us.

We are in a position to guarantee that this stock may sell at from $50.00 to $100.00 a share in 2 years time and that it will pay dividends or no less than 21 per cent in three years time, aside from any participating dividends it may pay in the same period.

We offer for sale IMMEDIATE DELIVERY.

YALE DIPLOMA OF 1776.

Was Issued to Rev. Aaron Church, a Congregational Minister.

From the Worcester Cor. Boston Herald.

A Yale diploma, issued in 1776, and conferring the degree of A. B. on Aaron Church, occupies a place of honor in the home of R. Howard Church, No. 4 Quincy street, letter carrier connected with the main postoffice in this city, and a great-grandson of the man to whom the ancient parchment was issued.

The diploma is in a fair state of preservation, despite its 133 years of age, and practically all of the Latin text is plainly discernable. The signatures of Thomas Clapp and Daniel Wilkinson, professors at Yale in the period in which the diploma was issued, are readable, but several other signatures have been almost obliterated by the ravages of time.

The document is kept under glass in a walnut frame, and is mounted on a piece of cloth cut from a bedspread that was given to Aaron Church on his wedding day June 5, 1776.

Aaron Church was a Congregational minister in Hartford, Conn., and a small sheet of paper covered with original shorthand notes made by him during his career as a preacher is mounted at each corner of the spread on which the diploma rests.

The diploma is one of a number of antiques and heirlooms that ornament the Church home. The entire spread, previously referred to, minus the piece on which the diploma is mounted, is a treasure of which Mr. Church and all the members of his family are exceedingly proud. It is a gorgeous affair, the pattern showing imaginable brightly colored peacocks scattered over a white background. It is in an excellent state of preservation.

A square of patchwork comprising a same of every dress contained in the wedding trousseau of Aaron Church's bride, who was Miss Lydia Merrick, of Wilbraham, Mass., is also included in Mr. Church's collection. An old punch bowl that was used by his reverend ancestor when he entertained his clerical brethren is another much prized possession. This is of decorated glass and about the size of a quart pitcher.

DEMAND FOR GOLF LINKS GROWS

From Daily Consular Reports.

Consul Joseph G. Stephens reports from Plymouth that after a lapse of 18 years roller skating has again become popular throughout the United Kingdom, and that a boom which has never before been equaled in England is spreading to all of the large towns and cities. The consul continues:

According to one of the leading London dailies skating is today the most popular form of indoor amusement and exercise. Nothing else approaches it.

An American company, allied with a firm of roller skate manufacturers in the United States has opened large rinks in 17 cities of Scotland, England, Ireland and Wales. These rinks accommodate on an average about 5,000 skaters each. It is stated that the company finds it difficult to keep pace with the demand for more rinks, so great is the popular enthusiasm for this pastime.

Ten thousand pairs of ball-bearing steel roller skates are provided for the crowds attending the Olympia rink alone. By the middle of January there were more than 100,000 pairs of skates in use on the rinks of this single American company.

A man learns to live when he begins to live and learn.

RICH ORE SHOOT IN THE W. P. H.

VEIN FOUR FEET WIDE AND SHOWS PICTURE ORE.

Milling Quality Found in Outcroppings in Pony Gulch Section. Prince Albert Rich.

CRIPPLE CREEK, Colo., March 6.—The rich discovery made recently at the W. P. H., on Ironclad hill, owned by the United Gold Mines company, and operated under lease by J. M. Roach of Chicago and Oscar D. Fogleman of Cripple Creek, is of importance to the property. Fogleman recently secured a lease and started to prospect from the fourth level to open a flat vein under development in the Forest Queen, adjoining, of which Fogleman is superintendent. In the prosecution of this work a vertical vein, new to the property, was unexpectedly encountered.

The new ore body is full four feet wide and carries a rich shoot. It has been opened for a distance of about 30 feet and an upraise carried 155 feet above the level has shown continuous high values. Quartz from the vein shows both sylvanite and rusty gold, and picked samples run into the pictures.

Milling grade ore of from $4 to $6 a ton has been opened southwest of here, in the Pony Gulch section, south of and adjoining the property and mills of the Little Giant company. The property on which the discovery was made is a group of claims owned by Dorchester, Mass., parties represented locally by William Hatch. The ore taken from the outcroppings of a large deposit is similar in character to that found in the overflow on the Fluorine on Copper mountain. A shaft has been started down through the outcroppings, and is to be carried 200 feet before lateral work is attempted. In connection with the discovery, advices from Chicago are that the mill of the Little Giant company will shortly resume operations, treating the ore already developed. The Little Giant company is being financed.

William Bahten and Daniel Leddy, lessees, who only a few days ago began operations in block H of the Prince Albert property, on Beacon hill, have opened up ore at surface and received assay returns of from $11 to $17.20 from samples taken from different parts of the vein. The ore body is less a little better than two feet between walls. The lessees will begin shipping at once. Several sets of lessees are at work on the Prince Albert, and all of them are operating at a profit.

BLOCKADE IS LIFTED

Bullion Shipments From Ouray, but no Concentrates $150,000 in One Week.

OURAY, Colo., March 13.—Almost $150,000 worth of gold bullion was shipped from Ouray during the last five days of last week, despite the fact that the snow blockades have caused a shortage of cars.

On Monday, $15,000 of bullion was loaded in the express car, but Tuesday was the day that raised the amount to $50,000. Just before train time on Tuesday morning one might have seen a strong man swaying under a heavy load in a good-sized sack, making his way to the station. When he got to the station he placed his load in the hands of the express company. He had carried between $20,000 and $25,000 on his back through the streets of Ouray, but as he might have carried a feed of oats for his horse. This was the cleanup from the Revenue.

Tuesday morning also there was a number of small bags—large as shot sacks—loaded into the safe of the express car. These were from the Camp Bird mine and contained a total of something like $25,000. Wednesday another $10,000 went out from the Camp Bird. Thursday was another banner day, when the Camp Bird cleanup, amounting to $40,000, was expressed out. Friday another $10,000 found its way from the Camp Bird to the express car.

Altogether this was not such a bad week for exportation from our mines, even though the concentrates are lying stacked on the ground in the railway yards. With the increased out-

SILVER ORE BEING HELD IN RESERVE

MILLION OUNCES STORED BY TONOPAH COMPANY.

Nevada Mine Management Waiting for an Advance in Price of White Metal.

TONOPAH, Nevada, March 13.—That the Tonopah Mining company has one million ounces of silver in storage is the remarkable fact revealed to the Tonopah Sun by W. W. Charles of San Francisco, a member of the corporation. This circumstance is evidently due to the low price of the white metal and indicates that the Tonopah Mining company prefers to speculate a bit upon the future price of its product than to let go at prevailing figures. An advance of 10 cents in the price of silver would mean a profit of $100,000 to the company, and, if such an advance should occur within 12 months, which is not unlikely, it would mean a profit of 20 per cent on the capital tied up in the bullion. Evidently the management have faith in their speculation.

The statement of Mr. Charles was made in explanation of the recent rise in the price of the stock. He said:

"I really cannot tell you the exact cause for the big jump in our stock, but I can give you a couple of hints. It may not be generally known, but is nevertheless a fact, that we have one million ounces of silver stored, in addition to the fat treasury and paying dividends at the rate of a million dollars a year.

"Our fiscal year closed February 28, and the showing made on the books is such as has doubtless awakened some people who were sellers and made them purchasers instead, but I am talking personally to you and not making a report for the company by any means; however, the facts I have given you are irrefutable.

"The amount of development work that is being carried on, in addition to the work of extraction, is probably the greatest in the history of the mine, and the showings are gilt-edged. The installation of the pump means much, but you must see Superintendent Blackburn about that.

"The capitalization of the company is only 1,000,000 shares, paying dollar for dollar a year at par, and the majority of people who got in on the ground floor paid a minute fraction (imagine, what effect this showing should have in the east on all Tonopah stocks."

TUNNEL STRIKES GOOD VEIN IN BOSTON LODE

Large Body of Lead and Iron Exposed Ore Also Carries Gold and Silver.

IDAHO SPRINGS, Col., March 13.—The Philadelphia tunnel, driven on the Boston lode to develop the Croesus mines on Belleview mountain, is opening a fine body of ore in the former claim. For 300 feet the tunnel has been passing through a body of lead, and from which also contains good values in gold and silver.

In the heading the streak is three feet wide, and in the stopes it averages fully eighteen inches. An material broken in the tunnel is sent to the Dover mill, with which the tunnel is connected by a tram track.

Cappel & Co., leasing in the second level of the Gem mine, shipped 800 tons of ore the last thirty days, from which they realized handsome returns. A large increase of the number of leases in the Gem mine will be allowed in the near future and the output of the mine doubled during the summer.

Michael Doyle and associates have begun preparations to start up the Pioneer mine, which has been idle for some time. The Syndicate mill at Dumont has been secured and will be supplied from the Pioneer.

W. M. Taylor, foreman of the Little Mattie mill, is erecting a ten-stamp mill on the Little Flat mine, on Oregon creek. The plant will be completed and ready to handle ore by the middle of May.

FIVE-YEAR LEASE ON FREE COINAGE GROUP

BOSTON SYNDICATE SECURES VALUABLE HOLDINGS.

Eastern Capital Being Interested in Cripple Creek.—Will Work Below 550-Foot Point.

Special to The Gazette.

ALTMAN, Colo., March 13.—A five years' lease with graded royalties has been signed by Pres. J. R. Neville of the Free Coinage Gold Mining company, whereby a syndicate of Boston, Mass., capitalists will operate and develop the mines of that corporation to great depth.

The properties of the Free Coinage company, the Pinto, Rising Sun, Wilson Bison No. 2, and the Pueblo mines, forming a compact group on Bull hill within the corporate limits of the town of South Altman, have recently been subjected to exhaustive examination by Forbes Rickard of Denver, the well known mining engineer, who will act as consulting engineer for the Altman Leasing company, under which name the syndicate will operate.

At the present time 16 sets of lessees are engaged in the development of the Free Coinage company's estate. All of these are producing and the March output will approximate $25,000 gross bullion value.

The lease executed and delivered to George H. Woodin of Boston, Mass., representing the eastern investors, while covering the entire holdings of the Free Coinage company, will not interfere with the operations of the present or future lessees in that the conditions as related therein cover the ground below a depth of 550 feet, and not above that depth. Operations are to commence with the least possible delay on the Pinto mine, and the shaft on this mine, now 575 feet deep, is to be sunk to the 1,000-foot point. No lateral work will be attempted until a depth of 800 feet is attained. The present shaft house and surface buildings are to be remodeled and equipped with a modern mine plant, including first motion hoist, battery of boilers, powerful air compressor and all equipment necessary to deep mining operations.

This plant is to be installed within 90 days.

In this connection it may be stated that the Union Leasing company recently granted an eighteen months' lease on the Pinto from the 550 foot level to surface will continue development of the mine until the expiration of the lease.

Joe E. Cooper, the well known mine superintendent of this district, has been engaged by the Altman Leasing company as its superintendent.

The Free Coinage Gold Mining company is capitalized for 1,000,000 shares of the par value of $1 each. The company is a close corporation and the stock has never been listed on the mining stock exchanges. The mines of the company have produced to date in excess of $2,000,000 from above the 550 foot level of its deepest shaft on the Pinto mine and with the deep mining planned by the new leasing company the estate should develop one of the heaviest and richest producing mines of the entire Cripple Creek gold mining district.

WRITING BY TELEPHONE

From the London Daily Mail.

Any one in London having a telephone can now have a "telewriter" attached, so that, on ringing up another person similarly equipped, he can transmit a written message or draw a sketch or write figures while speaking, his writing being instantaneously reproduced by an electric pen at the other end.

The first telewriter exchange was opened yesterday in London Wall buildings, E. C., and already about 200 subscribers have applied. If the subscriber who is rung up happens to be out or unable to answer the call, a message can be written automatically on its telewriter pad by writing it with the special pen on the pad of the instrument by which the call is made. The phone attendant will hear it in his instrument.

GLOBE CAMP HAS HOPEFUL FUTURE

NO EVIDENCE OF A RECESSION IN THE OUTPUT.

Arizona Properties Boom Ahead With Absolute Confidence in Strength of Copper Situation.

GLOBE, Ariz., March 13.—The arrival of mining men on almost every train is assurance that there has been no abatement of interest in Globe district; among investors in copper properties, and also funds for restore confidence in the early restoration of normal conditions in the industry.

There are at present a number of visitors here on mining business, from which it is expected deals of importance will be consummated.

There has been no material curtailment of operations by the mining companies of Globe district on account of the sharp decline in the price of the metal, and as the feeling is general that we are now witnessing the lowest price for copper likely to obtain this year, and that there will be a very much better demand for the metal in the near future, the local situation is reassuring. Activity is not confined to any particular section, but prevails all over the district, and new work being started from time to time calls for the employment of more men.

Developments on the lower levels of the Old Dominion mine continue to be very favorable.

Plans and specifications for the central electric power plant have been completed, and it is hoped to have it installed some time during the coming spring. The first shaft to be electrically equipped will probably be the Gray.

Owing to the low price of copper the Old Dominion is not striving to make a large output. Nevertheless, with four furnaces in blast, the production for February did not fall below 3,500,000 pounds of blister copper.

The Superior and Boston is making good headway in the development of its property and is making regular shipments of 50 tons of ore daily.

There has been a material increase in the number of visitors to the Cripple Creek district during the past week, and the indications are that the coming season will be a very busy one. Many of the mines are preparing to resume operations on a large scale, and the mills will be kept busy.

INTEREST IN STOCK MARKET IS LANGUID

Indifference to Developments of All Kinds Shown Break in Wabash Securities.

NEW YORK, March 13.—Attendance was small at the stock exchange today and interest in the market was languid. The market showed its recently prevailing indifference to developments of all kinds. The break in Wabash securities seemed to follow a published expression of doubt by the head of the system that E. H. Harriman was to become a director, although cordial regard between the two men was asserted. The merger of the Equitable Trust company, counted as a Harriman institution, with the Bowling Green Trust company, in which the Gould name has appeared conspicuously, was also cited as evidence of the approchement of these two financial groups. Prices of grain have cut down our exports, imports of various commodities are expanding heavily with the reviving demand and foreigners are still winding home their holdings of American securities to market.

Money remains almost a drug and large offerings at concessions in rates are failing to induce sufficient borrowing to take up the supplies. The weekly bank statement showed no important change in the local banking situation.

Bonds were irregular. Total sales, par value, $1,402,000. U. S. 2's registered, the 2's registered and the 4's coupon have advanced 1-4 per cent on call during the week.

WHEAT PRICES MOVE OVER NARROW RANGE

Deadlock Prevails in Grain Market Little Change Over Previous Day's Session.

CHICAGO, March 13.—A deadlock prevailed in the wheat market today and prices moved over a narrow range. At the close prices showed almost no change from the final quotations of the previous session. Corn closed easy, oats steady and provisions weak.

There was no renewal of the decided activity or strength in the wheat pit today, such as was noted yesterday, and prices fluctuated over a half cent range. Foreign markets did not follow the two-cent advance here the previous day, and there was no news of importance to inspire either buying or selling. One of the leading longs and followers sold moderately throughout the day. May sold between $1.16 5-8 and $1.17 1-4 and July between $1.04 7-8 to $1.05 and $1.05 1-2. The close was steady, with May unchanged at $1.17 1-8. July was a shade lower at $1.06 3-8 to $1.05 1-2.

A slack shipping demand for the cash grain and predictions of increased receipts from the interior next week had a depressing effect on the cash market, sentiment in the pit being bearish all day. The market closed at net losses of 1-8 to 1-8 to 1-4, May being at 68 3-8 and July at 67 3-4.

Oats moved within extremely narrow bounds, the range for the day being confined to about 1-4c. At the close prices were unchanged to a shade higher. May at 55 3-8 and July at 50c.

Provisions were weak. The closing prices were 5 to 10c to 12 1-2c lower than yesterday.

BANK AGNOSTIC WITNESS

Camden Dispatch to the New York Tribune.

Because he would not say there was a God, Dr. Persifor Frazer, a well-known Philadelphia scientist and handwriting expert, was barred as a witness Thursday in the case of the State against John Meirs, a lawyer of this city, accused of misdemeanor by Miss Eulia Tilton, a young woman of Philadelphia.

Dr. Frazer was called by the state to testify as an expert in an effort to identify a letter said to have been written by Meirs to the complainant. Former Judge Gaskill, of counsel for the defense, asked the doctor, who declined to take the usual oath, if it was because he did not believe in God.

"I do not know whether there is a God or not," replied the scientist, on the lawyer's motion Judge Reilstab excused him from testifying. Afterward he stated that he had been appearing for thirty years as an expert in chirography in all parts of the country, but that this was the first time a judge had sustained that objection. He was one of the witnesses in the Molineux trial in New York.

A QUEER HAREM DISH

From Tit-Bits.

A great dish at Egyptian harem feasts is that of a lamb roasted whole. After the manner of a nest of Chinese boxes, each smaller than the other, the lamb is stuffed with a whole turkey, the turkey with a chicken, and the chicken with a pigeon, the pigeon with a quail, and the quail with a beccafico, the smallest bird known except the humming bird. The lamb is roasted over a slow fire until it is almost ready to fall to pieces.

SUMMER FROCK FOR YOUNG GIRL

Drawn by Katharine Vaughan Holden

THE model here is for a young girl's summer gown of French lawn. It is cut in a simple fashion, avoiding extremes. The skirt is in four gores, not too tight about the hips, with a seam front and back and on each side.

There is an applied panel which may be effectively embroidered in outline stitch in linen floss.

The waist carries out the panel effect, also with the embroidered design, and it is attached to the skirt in semi-princess style by the adjustment of the neatly stitched girdle. The tailored effect of the whole, if carefully carried out, will give to the little frock a distinction which is to be found in only the better class of ready-to-wear dresses.

There is a guimpe of white tucked lawn, which may be made high in the neck with a collar-band, or which would perhaps be better cut with a Dutch neck for Summer's warmer days.

A Helpful Page for the Housewife

Useful Household Utensils

By Ellen Wise

FOR their size spices give the housewife a terrible lot of trouble. Cinnamon is all very well in its way, but if it gets in the way of the pepper it is not well at all. Neither is it conducing to domestic happiness when the former mistakes cloves, and, nothing with that highly prized spice, concocts [illegible] buns that are not named in the baker's book.

It is essential to keep the spices apart, and this adds to the number of baking powder tins in the kitchen closet. Now, no woman will admit that she doesn't know where to lay her hand on the particular baking powder tin that contains the pepper. Neither will she plead guilty to the charge that nine times out of ten she takes down the cinnamon tin when she needs the nutmeg or the clove receptacle when she intends to get the tin containing the cinnamon. Nevertheless the baking powder tin idea can be improved upon.

To provide a receptacle for spices that will prevent a confusion of flavors, a spice carrier has been made that is constructed in lidded air-tight compartments. There are four of these compartments in the spice basket shown on this page, but they are made with more compartments if desired. The baskets are of light metal, with a metal handle, and the interiors are rounded so that the contents can be picked out in a hurry.

A neat little copper scoop, with a copper receptacle to match, is a boon for removing bread crumbs from the tablecloth. They are daintier in appearance than the old style brush and crumb receiver. The scoop is smaller than the brush and can be used with less ostentation.

Did you ever try to remove the skewer that the muscular arm of the butcher man had imbedded in the joint? Of course it comes out readily enough when the joint has been cooked, but the housewife often finds it necessary to remove the skewer or skewers before the joint is put on to cook. But did any housewife find it possible to do so without engaging in a sort of catch-as-catch-can wrestling bout with the joint?

Some one saw the exciting encounter one day and decided that [illegible] necessary to supplement the inadequate strength of the housewife with an implement that would cause the skewer to succumb in short order.

The skewer remover is a metal handle with a hole at the end. It is hooked around the projecting end of the skewer that is not wanted in the joint. By a turn of the wrist the leverage that can be employed jerks the skewer from its hold on the joint and it has to come out whether willing or not.

There has been trouble with the cast iron handles that were welcomed as doing away with the necessity for iron holders and simplifying the operations of ironing day. I refer to the handles that have a wooden piece for the hand. It appears that the heat from the iron causes this wooden handle to warp and in time to break loose from its fastening. To obviate this a new handle has been made that is all metal and cannot warp or break. It is claimed for this that it does not get hot and is as handy as the wooden one.

Two articles that it will be found well to have in a kitchen are illustrated on this page. One is an oyster knife, the other a stone for sharpening knives or kitchen tools. The latter is made especially for the use of women and is small, solid compact, with a cover to keep it in shape when not in use.

White Candy.

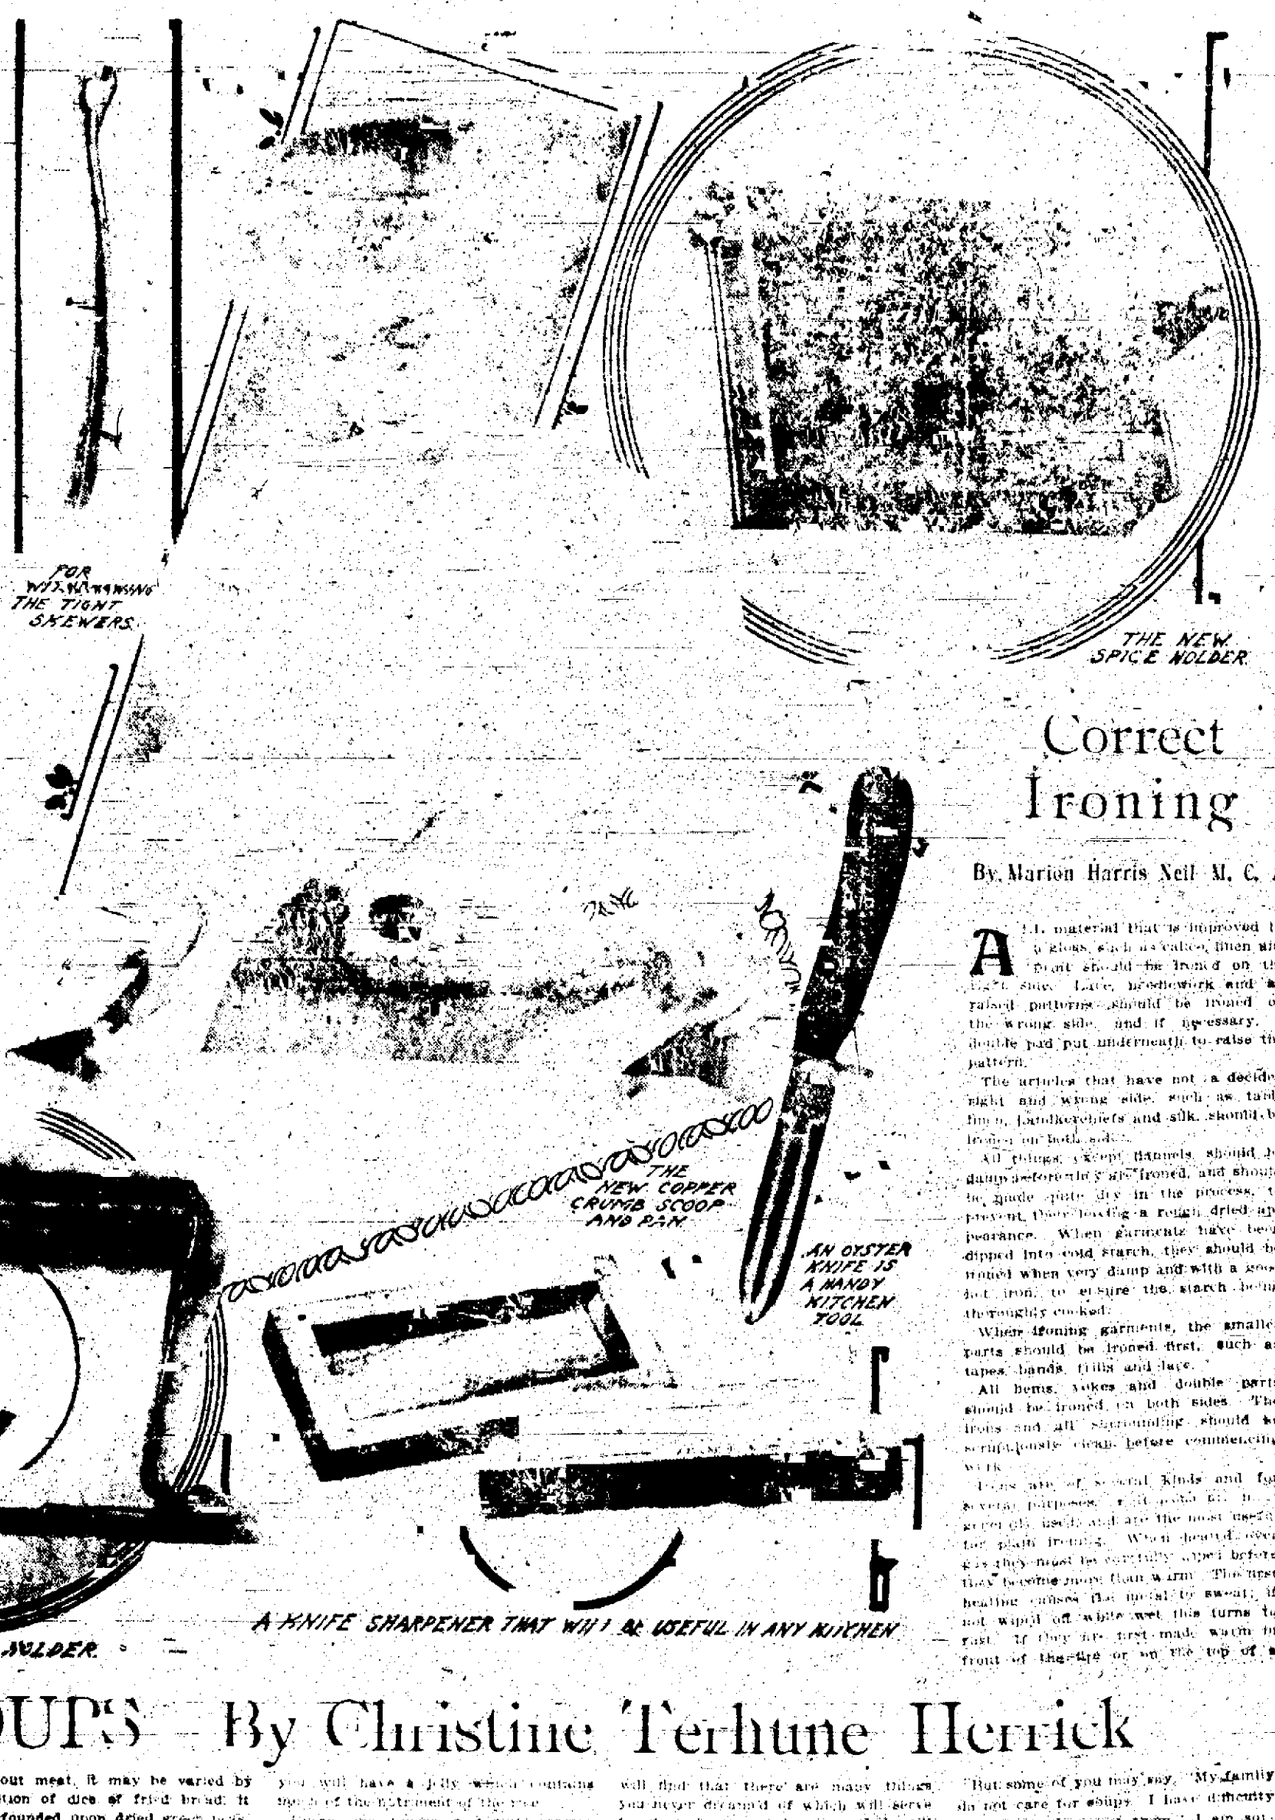
Take one pound of lump sugar, two tablespoonfuls of butter, a half a gill of cream, two teaspoonfuls of lemon juice, and half a gill of water. Put the sugar and water into an enameled saucepan, and when the sugar is dissolved put the pan over the fire and bring it to the boil.

When it boils stop stirring, and let it boil up, then remove the pan from the fire and stir into the boiling syrup a quarter of the butter.

When this has melted, put the pan on the fire again and bring it to the boil, take it off the fire and add another quarter of the butter; do this until all the butter is used up.

Cream must be treated in the same way. When all the butter is added let the candy boil quickly for ten minutes, stirring all the time. Test by dropping a little off a spoon into cold water; if it sets it is done. Then pour into a buttered tin, when nearly cold cut into squares.

The lemon juice is added just before pouring into the tin, a few drops of vanilla extract could be added instead of the lemon juice.



Correct Ironing

By Marion Harris Neil, M. C. A.

All material that is improved by a gloss, such as cotton, linen and paint should be ironed on the right side. Lace, needlework and all raised patterns should be ironed on the wrong side, and if necessary, a double pad put underneath to raise the pattern.

The articles that have not a decided right and wrong side, such as table linen, handkerchiefs and silk, should be ironed on both sides.

All things, except flannels, should be damp before they are ironed, and should be made quite dry in the process, to prevent their having a rough dried appearance. When garments have been dipped into cold starch, they should be ironed when very damp and with a good hot iron, to ensure the starch being thoroughly cooked.

When ironing garments, the smaller parts should be ironed first, such as tapes, bands, frills and lace.

All hems, yokes and double parts should be ironed on both sides. The irons and all surrounding should be scrupulously clean before commencing work.

Irons are of several kinds and for several purposes. Those with [illegible] are the most useful for plain ironing. When ironing over gas they must be carefully wiped before they become more than warm. The first heating causes the metal to sweat, if not wiped off while wet this turns to rust. If they are first made warm in front of the fire or on the top of a stove this precaution is not necessary.

New irons should be heated several times and rubbed on powdered bath brick several times before they are used. Irons are kept in the best condition by constant use; but if through neglect they become rusty, rub them while hot, with a piece of flannel on which brown paper sprinkled with salt. They should be kept in a dry place when not in use, as [illegible] away for any length of time they should be first rubbed over with fat.

Irons or sadirons are not to be black-leaded or painted, or varnished, as they [illegible] when heated.

Iron holder should be round in shape and just large enough to cover the handle of the iron. Bind the holders with tape not braid. The table used for ironing should be of good size, strong and steady, and its surface level. Its height must be considered carefully. See to how that one has to stoop over the work, not so high that one cannot get sufficient pressure.

Have the skirt board or table covered perfectly smooth, first with thick flannel then with a clean cotton cloth. Avoid having seams and patches on an ironing sheet, or have them where they will not come in the way when ironing. Never test the heat of an iron on the ironing sheet. Test it on a folded duster. If the duster smokes much the iron is too hot.

When the iron used is too hot, it scorches the clothes, when too cool, it clogs them, and will make the clothes look yellow and rough. The hottest irons are required for all starched things, but of course a person accustomed to ironing can use hotter irons than one who is inexperienced.

Have everything ready before commencing to iron. Put the iron stand and the iron at the right hand side, and have the clothes that require ironing at the left-hand side. There should be a basin of clean water and one or two pieces of clean rag to use for rubbing and dropping down the clothes. Have a thin bed of salt in a pan, on which to rub the irons. After rubbing the iron on the salt wipe it, go over it quickly with beeswax, and finally wipe with a clean cloth.

Ironing is an art which requires much practice before perfection can be reached. Spread the articles to be ironed smoothly on the table. Move the iron regularly over the fabric, using some pressure. A constant lifting of the iron and jerky movements are apt to produce wrinkles.

Tablecloths.

Tablecloths are ironed on the right side only. They should be folded down the center, with the right side out, then each selvedge turned back towards the center fold on either side. The cloth should be pulled by two persons till the ends meet evenly, and then, if possible, mangled.

To iron a tablecloth, lay it flat on the table in its folds, and iron in this way, taking care to iron between each fold, and passing with the iron over each side of the cloth. This must be continued until the cloth is quite dry. When a tablecloth is taken off a table after use, it should always be folded into the same folds.

If tray cloths have fringes, shake the fringe out against the edge of the table before ironing, and then comb it out. Iron the linen center on both sides until it is dry, and then dry the fringe with the iron. Small cloths should have as few folds in them as possible.

Body Linen.

Underlinen is ironed on one side only, viz., the right side. Begin by ironing any embroidery or trimmings on the wrong side, and if the embroidery is raised, it must be ironed over a piece of flannel so as to raise the pattern.

Always iron lace or work of any kind on the wrong side, as they are not meant to be bright, and if you iron them on the right side you make them so.

After the trimmings, iron any small parts such as bands, saddle, then the sleeves. Finish all small parts before beginning to iron the larger and plainer portions.

If one garment is much trimmed, fold it down the middle of the back when ironing the body part. Iron the back first, then the front, then fold the garment by the seams, and iron up to the shoulders. If the garment is not much trimmed it can be folded by the seams after ironing.

Iron everything until it is quite dry. Be careful not to crease the parts ironed, and always begin with the smallest and least important parts of a garment. Take the point of the iron well into any gatherers so as to dry them; and iron first underneath a plait, then press it into its place.

Iron the strings, frill and bands of a [illegible] from the rest. All black parts should be ironed on the wrong side first, then the right side, so as to dry them thoroughly. After ironing, fold plain underlinen, seam to seam, twice, then up to bottom twice. Lay the sleeves of [illegible] dresses inside after folding from [illegible] to side the first time. Fancy underclothing should be folded so as to show the trimmings, lay the strings and bits of [illegible] inside the folds.

Air all the clothes to air after ironing.

Plain handkerchiefs with a wide hem must be ironed all over on the right side, first folding, leaving the narrow hem outside. Plain pocket handkerchiefs are better done thus. When [illegible] dry fold the hems to the [illegible] and right side out and clasp. Then [illegible] out upon the handkerchief [illegible], having the side with the hems next to the table. Iron from that half well [illegible] from the middle and [illegible] across from the [illegible] side and iron, double once [illegible] iron over all iron, as it [illegible] be the side with the narrow [illegible] handkerchief will be beautifully soft and folded just as it should be.

A PLEA FOR SOUPS — By Christine Terhune Herrick

SOUP should make its daily appearance on the table of the woman who wishes to provide good, nutritious food for their families, and have comparatively little money with which to do it. I wonder in how many homes soup is a daily matter of course? I myself have stayed in houses for weeks at a time when soup never appeared on the board, and while good material, which might have served as a foundation for nourishing broths, was constantly thrown away.

There are several reasons for this neglect. One is that in many homes soup has always been rather the exception than the rule, and the housekeeper who shrinks from new ideas does not care to introduce this innovation.

Another cause of the non-appearance is an exaggerated notion of the trouble it involves. The women who have never had much experience in soup-making fancy that it is a bother, and occasionally they dislike the extra dish-washing that a soup course demands.

Still other women cherish the mistaken impression that soup is an added expense on the bill of fare, and believe they economize when they dispense with it.

All these attitudes towards soup testify to a certain amount of ignorance in those who hold them.

The up-to-date housekeeper who wishes to try anything new which may be of benefit to her family is the one who makes the best of her possessions, and the one who refuses [illegible] to take her rank among [illegible] bers."

As to the amount of work involved in soup-making, that, too, is exaggerated. Once soup-making is understood, it is little added labor, and as for the expense it is certainly a actual saving of money, if properly managed. As for dish-washing I cannot speak, for the housekeeper must set against the advantages furnished by the extra course.

In the old times the standard for soups differed much from what it is now. Then a soup was a sort of kind of a stew. The meat was boiled to shreds, and these same shreds were frequently served in the soup. Such a soup was almost a dinner in itself.

I have eaten soups which contained meat and vegetables in such quantities that when a portion of it had been dipped out the eater felt there was little accommodation for further food.

Such soup is expensive, as a matter of course, and no one is to blame who considers its presence on the bill of fare something of an extravagance.

But the soups with which we have to do nowadays are not of this variety. On the other hand, they serve as an introduction to the dinner by preparing the stomach for the harder work of digesting solid food.

A well made soup does not fill the stomach, so that later food overloads the digestive apparatus, but rather coaxes it to work.

Herein lies the common sense of the dictate of convention that one shall not take a second plate of soup that would flood the stomach with fluid and leave no space for solid food that would stick to the ribs.

I have said that the old fashioned soup had a meat foundation, and often a meat superstructure as well.

Some of the soups of to-day are founded upon meats, and, of course, the clear soups must have fresh meat bought especially for the purpose of soup-making.

But for the ordinary family soups the careful housekeeper, who has studied as she should, rarely finds it necessary to buy fresh stock. Her soup pot is replenished from the trimmings of the meat. She never gets her butcher [illegible] the trimmings of her own table [illegible] are always sent home. The bones of [illegible] with a portion of the meat are used for stock, the left pieces of vegetables have their place in the stock pot, [illegible] are few soups which can be [illegible] at all which may not derive [illegible] from [illegible].

Any housekeeper who [illegible] soups and does not do so [illegible] money in doing it should [illegible] of vegetable soups. [illegible] of vegetables as a foundation for [illegible] and [illegible].

[illegible] soup is perhaps the first soup to suggest itself. But those who have [illegible] or have studied [illegible] have a good deal yet to learn.

The good old fashioned pea soup with a foundation of the liquor of a corned [illegible] or a piece of pork is excellent but there are other preparations not far behind it in goodness. The pea soup may be without meat, it may be varied by the addition of dice of fried bread; it may be founded upon dried green peas, instead of the ordinary white beans.

Black bean soup with slices of hard boiled egg and of lemon added to it the last thing before it goes to the table is delicious and so is a soup made of lentils, if these are soaked and cooked in the right way.

Who has tried a soup made of the remains of the dish of baked beans? If you do not know it make an experiment with it as soon as possible. You will find it worth your while to have extra beans for the sake of the soup.

But not only [illegible] soups are valuable and palatable. I [illegible] see the very [illegible] soup may be made [illegible] which [illegible] serve as a foundation. [illegible] ly true of the [illegible] boiled. This [illegible] away. Set it aside until it [illegible] you will have a jelly which contains much of the nutriment of the meat.

Every one knows a [illegible] cream soup. How many have I had at hotel cream soup, a cauliflower cream soup, a celery cream soup? For these you do not have to use parts of the vegetables. The trimmings and leavings have their place here as well as with meat soups. More than one vegetable may be used in a soup. The [illegible] from your peas, when you have had enough of either to make a puree or [illegible] of your potato soup, and so [illegible] you like the [illegible].

Next [illegible] soups [illegible] I know an excellent [illegible] soup which contains [illegible] but a [illegible] I have found [illegible] and brown [illegible] I have been made with

DESIGNS FOR ORNAMENTAL FIGURE AND TOWEL END

Drawn by

SARAH HALE HUNTER

WHEN using this printed design from the paper the directions are as follows:—

If the material used is very sheer, the easiest way is to lay it over the design, which will show through plainly, and draw over each line with a hard, sharp lead pencil. If your linen is heavy buy a piece of impressed paper, the kind that does not rub off, lay it on your material, place the design over it and trace with a hard pencil. You will find the design neatly transferred and ready to be embroidered.

In transferring a design when only one part is given fold your linen so that the two right sides come together. Between these two sides insert two sheets of impression paper, placing the writing sides of paper toward each other, then place your design on the folded material and draw each line firmly with a hard, sharp pencil. You will find that both sides of the design are produced on the linen.

A towel-end to be worked in the buttonhole stitch and an ornamental figure to be done in the solid satin stitch and used above a hemstitched hem are the patterns for today.

Pad the towel-end thoroughly, then buttonhole closely in white or colored mercerized cotton No. 20.

The figure should be well padded and then worked over and over solidly in mercerized cotton No. 20.

Initials may be used in the center of each design.

APRIL FOOL GAMES

By Mary Dawson

A SPLENDID way to entertain fun-loving people of any age or all ages on the first of April is by a Mad Tea Party.

No admirer of the immortal Alice in Wonderland will have to ask where this timely and alluring title comes from.

Invitations first of all should suggest the date and afford a hint of the nature of the frolic in advance.

Although the day is distinctly named as April first, no guest will probably be asked to come to celebrate the Fourth of July or for a Thanksgiving festival.

If each note sheet or little card used for the invitation can be decorated with a sprig of holly or a sprig of imitation in white colors the effect is even better.

If there is time for a little advance preparation the festive [illegible] be trimmed in crazy style, which [illegible] to the [illegible] and fun involved.

Pictures and [illegible] are draped with crape, bands of which tie back the curtains. Be sure to wear all clock faces with pasteboard [illegible] on which the word SOLD is boldly printed with black lettering in imitation of the way that articles are [illegible] in the shops. Any guest glancing up to ascertain the time will be quick to appreciate the allusion.

These absurdities help very much to amuse the early arrivals while awaiting the last of the company.

Numerous placards, as for example one warning guests to KEEP OFF THE GRASS will also help the fun along. Any kind of April foolishness will do for these placards or mottoes.

Mine host or the big brother of the household might be attired a la Fauntleroy, with knickerbockers, rolling collar and sash. He might wear a candy cane girded on as a sword.

The hostess may elect to appear in long white dress, modeled on that of an infant with close-fitting cap of muslin and embroidery, tying under the chin. Whatever costume she selects she must wear long sleeves and gloves, so that the right hand can be drawn up well into the cuff. The mate of the glove stuffed out with sawdust is held in the right hand. The sleeves conceal the junction of real and artificial, and the hand, when extended in greeting, frequently comes away in the grasp of the astonished guest.

Before the game begins let some member of the household pass around the room offering a box of delicious-looking chocolates. Timid people fearing the peppery goodies associated in the mind with April 1st will decline. In this they are mistaken, the bonbons being genuine candy, with no element of disagreeable joke in their composition. No one who has previously refused is given a second opportunity to regale himself.

Lead off the games with a peanut search. This frolic is on a new and unusual plan, a fact of which the company is not made aware.

The hostess introduces the contest rather apologetically as "something not new, but which everybody will know how to play."

Paper bags with colored stripes, such as peanuts are sold in by circus venders, are distributed among the gentlemen of the party.

The entertainer suggests that each gentleman invite one of the girls to become his partner for the hunt, and offers prizes for the greatest number of peanuts found.

With the ringing of a signal bell the scramble begins. Never were peanuts so carefully hidden, it seems. The most painstaking ferreting fails to reveal so much as a single nut. When five minutes has passed and the bags remain as empty as they were in the beginning of the game, the fact that they are celebrating April first is likely to dawn upon the revelers.

Surrounded and taxed with her duplicity, the hostess laughingly protests that she merely [illegible] a search for peanuts with the understanding that any would be found. She confesses that she would have been rather surprised to see many of the little "gashers" she had in her parlor, and totally at a loss to account for their presence there, as none had been hidden.

Place cards are the very small white ones with beveled gilt [illegible], so much favored by confectioners. On one side appears the name of the guest. On the reverse, which is turned down when the [illegible] take their places, is a humorous suggestion or quotation which the player will be obliged to perform in the parlor after supper.

While still in advance of the party cut out [illegible] stars and a crescent moon from gilt and silver paper. Paste these over the panes of one of the dining room windows. Draw the curtains over the glass so as to conceal the planetary effect.

While the supper is in progress someone from the outside plays a hose upon the shadow (care must be taken to have it closed) not decorated with the stars.

The hostess exclaims that it may be raining. If the night be a [illegible] (and otherwise the trick can not be introduced), this announcement will occasion great dismay among the guests who have come without umbrellas. The curtains can then be withdrawn from the opposite window and the assemblage reassured with a view of the moon and stars.

If the home cupboard boasts a set of covered bouillon cups, the first course might be these wee vessels brought to table quite empty. This omission, when discovered, is hastily repaired by the maid who produces a steaming bouillon in a chocolate pot, an ice water carafe or anything else equally unexpected. Pass the [illegible] on a shiny new dairy pan.

Baked potatoes of extra large size, if served on luncheon plates, will not fail to excite surprise. The upper half of each tuber comes away readily, however, revealing a hollow filled with a dainty lobster or salmon croquette, or [illegible] dressing and peas.

For the chicken salad make little heads of lettuce from two shades of green tissue paper. Line with parchment paper or tin foil. After tucking away the portions of salad in the hearts of these lettuces close the latter securely at the top. Serve on salad plates.

With this course pass rolled sandwiches of bread and butter or any relish desired. In those passed to the hostess and her accomplices the bread can be rolled around the little toy squeakers, obtainable from novelty manufacturers.

When bitten into carefully the sandwich emits a shrill and unexpected protest.

With the ice cream offer what appear to be chocolate Easter eggs. These are really nothing more or less than sponge cakes of feathery lightness, made in egg-shape, dipped in chocolate and decorated with white icing.

With coffee served from a teapot, and bonbons passed in an empty breakfast food box, the edible masquerading comes to an end.

After supplying the evening with gaily with the redemption of the [illegible] imposed by the place.

MISS HUNTER'S CORRESPONDENCE

JOAN.—Very attractive little bows are made of white or colored satin ribbon in this way: Use ribbon about 3½ inches wide, and two or four short loops at the top, leaving quite long ends. These ends are folded under to form a V-shape or point, and a dainty little spray of flowers and leaves is embroidered just above the edge, the embroidery following the shape of the end.

The sides and points are finished with mock jewels or tiny silk balls to match the ribbon.

The design of flowers should be very small and done in Dresden colors. The white satin bows with colored embroidery are especially taking.

Double Buttonhole Stitch.

L. A.—Double buttonhole stitch is made in rows by taking two buttonhole stitches close together, then a space and two more close stitches.

The next row is made fast below this, using the spaces of the first row for the two close stitches of the second row.

Each row is made in this way so the effect is like bricks placed in a wall.

Decorative Boutonniere.

MRS. ROSS.—A pretty boutonniere button for decorative purposes on one's coat can be made on a mold of satin, velvet, or of the material of the gown itself, covered with cross-bars of rope silk, the bars caught down with a tiny stitch where they intersect.

The edge of the button is finished with one row of cross-stitch or two rows of outline stitch, with French knots between. Silk in shades to match the gown or coat may be used, and if a touch of gold is required old gold silk will be found more satisfactory than gold thread, which tarnishes so quickly.

Cannot Use Design.

MRS. C. R. H.—The pattern you send me is a very pretty one, but I cannot use any designs appearing in other papers or magazines.

You had better write to the magazine which published the design and ask if you can get it in the size you wish. Thank you for your kind appreciation of the patterns.

"Blind" Loop.

L. A. F.—A "blind" loop, which is used on garments that are to be worn [illegible] made by first marking the loop on [illegible] the [illegible] and making a bar of three stitches, one over the other, the length the loop is to be.

This bar is to be buttonholed closely, using the eye instead of the point of the needle for the purpose, and the needle does not have to go [illegible] the material, only under the [illegible] work can be done [illegible].

The purl should come on the outside edge of the loop. When finished fasten the thread securely on the wrong side.

Hat Design.

E. M.—Several patterns for lingerie hats in embroidery and braiding will be published very soon. The braided de- [illegible] is constantly done with excellent effect by [illegible].

Shirtwaist and Skirt Panel.

[illegible] and panel designs to be [illegible] Land embroidery. You can get these by sending 15 cents in stamps [illegible] signs look best on heavy linen, but you can use embroidery in a sheerer material with good effect.

I have not received any stamped, self-addressed envelope from you, or would have sent you a personal answer.

Dainty Gift for Housekeeper.

DAISY S.—A chafing dish centerpiece, with doilies to match, will make a most useful and acceptable gift for a young housekeeper.

Linen duck is a satisfactory material to use, with a design of rabbits on all, worked in two or three shades of old blue. On the centerpiece use six rabbits, three large and three small ones, and on the doilies three small ones. Buttonhole the edge with blue and finish with heavy lace.

The rabbits may be outlined with the darkest shade of blue and the background darned with the lighter shades.

Not in Shadow Work.

B. R. L.—The design you ask for would not do at all for shadow work, and would not make an effective design even in the solid embroidery.

Thank you for your kind appreciation of the patterns. It is very pleasant to know that they are of so much use.

Tea Apron.

MISS B.—A small tea apron of white lawn, with a design of shadow embroidery across the edge and half way up the sides, can be quickly and easily made.

Use pink embroidery silk for the shadow work and the effect will be very dainty. Pink satin ribbon run through a casing or lace beading can be used for strings at the top.

A full ruffle of the lawn edged with narrow lace is used around the apron. This ruffle is wide at the bottom and narrow at the sides, and may be attached to the paper and asking for the numbers of the patterns you desire.

The newspaper pattern only will be sent you.

Others will be drawn from time to time.

Embroidered Stockings.

MISS F. F. E.—I will give patterns for embroidered stockings as soon as possible.

Princess Design.

C. L. G.—I am sorry that I am unable to give the Princess design you ask for, as it is too large for my space in the paper.

Chemise Design.

MISS AGNES J.—I am very glad that you have found the patterns to your good effect, and will be glad to give a chemise pattern as soon as I have space for it.

Adopt Part of Other Designs.

MRS. I. H. P.—I am sorry that I cannot give the pattern you ask for, as it would appear so long after the shirtwaist which it corresponds with, that it would not be practicable.

Why do you not use parts of the waist on the collar and cuffs of the [illegible]

Shirtwaist Design.

MISS M. E. L.—I will be glad to draw a shirtwaist design to be worked with the braid you sent me a sample of, but I can not tell you when it will appear.

To Reverse Shirtwaist Design.

MRS. L. L. S.—It would reverse the shirtwaist pattern you wish if and use it at the lower part of the front of the skirt, you will be pleased with the result, I think.

This is constantly done in the art needlework shops, and we delighted that you have found the patterns so useful.

SMART FASTER HATS

Black chip hat trimmed with heron aigrettes and having the new satin strings.

A combination of brown and rose tints.

WHETHER a woman looks pretty or not depends more on her hat than on any other part of her costume, but if she cannot find something to suit her this Spring she is indeed hard to please. A great variety of shapes are displayed among the new models. Toques, huge turbans, picture hats, and mushroom styles are all to be fashionable. The most striking examples among the imported models are quite large, with low crowns, and are worn low over the hair, as was the mode this winter. Picturesque strings of soft satin appear on many models. These do not serve any useful purpose, but are mounted loosely in the front, as shown in the illustration, with heron aigrettes, or they may be caught up in some graceful fashion at the back.

Wide, soft scarfs draped effectively of chiffon or mousseline de soie are favorite trimmings for [illegible] often the scarf is drawn through a big straw [illegible]
